THE "FROG SWAMP" in the eastern part of our borough is a decidedly had thing. On a warm day, "the rankest compound of villain ous smell that ever offended nostril," as Billy Shakespeare says, pervades the atmosphere in its vicinity. The foul effluvia that arises is putting in jeopardy the health of our citizens : for we believe it is a fact that the gases generated in such places, though they are specially to our nostrils, unsuited to our longs, and noxious to our system. Some immediate ac-tion should, therefore, be taken to have the well selected stock of the purchase an extensive and well selected stock of Congested to that degree that blood discharged swamp drained and filled up. The water could be drawn off by underdraining; and charcoal and coal ashes could be spread over the surface, and would answer not only for filling up, but as a disinfecting agent. Whether this would be a practicable mode of proceeding or
