AGRICULTURAL.

Agriculture—Its Resources.

The capabilities of Agriculture ought not to be judged by anything that has yet transpired. The old Romans knew something of the art. Modern Europeans have learned more. We, in this country, are making advances. A thousand minds are intensely investigating the means for increasing the earth's productivity. Success is already achieved, sufficient to warrant the expectation of further advances. But if we look at the present means for diffusing intelligence, by the printed sheet and by the telegraph, writing the news at the place desired, though hundreds of miles off, instead of writing it at home and sending by a post; if we compare present facilities for manufacturing with past; or if we look at the strides made in navigation between the times of Queen Elizabeth and Queen Victoria, or even between those of Washington and our own, we shall find that science has not yet achieved for agriculture what she has for other departments of human enterprise. But we are not to despair. The task is a great one. She will yet achieve more for this great interest than for all others. In order to understand this subject fully, let us look at the nature of agriculture.

What does Agriculture propose to do? Not to create something out of nothing. That might be, certainly would be, too hard a task. Not to work with sparing materials. There is a great deal of bread-stuff in the air and the ground. The very rocks are full of it. Every drop of rain contains it. Using ever so much does not diminish the supply; for soon it returns to its original condition, and is ready to be used over again. Some Englishman, a few years ago, found out that by taking old pants, picking them in pieces, and working them over, he could spin and weave them anew, and make new pants of them. We wondered what made our pants wear rough and tear easy, lose their shape and stick out at the knees. They told "it was not wool; it was shoddy;" and we did not like shoddy much, but it was using the same materials over; there was economy for somebody, if not for the buyer; and if we will forever buy our pants abroad, instead of giving the wool-growing to our own farmers, and the cloth-making to our own manufacturers, and the fitting to our own tailors, it is good enough for us if we do get cheated. But look at the economy; the same wool that made the Duke of Portland's pants last winter, will make those of his servant next, those of his valet the third; and then make a warm blanket for his horse the fourth; and after that be fit to grind into a new blanket for his Suffolk pigs the fifth, and so on; perhaps after a while to be shipped in some taking form to this country. It is so with the materials of plants and of human food—except the cheat. The same elements of matter which made the dinners of our forefathers, make ours, had made those of their ancestors back to Adam, and will make those of our descendants as long as time lasts. The phosphate of lime in your beef and bread, the sulphate of lime in your corn cake, and the potash in your potatoes, have figured at many a table; and the organic elements combined in them have travelled round the globe more times than Ledley ever thought of doing, and have constituted a part of the food at more tables than he ever sat by; and yet are not shoddy—are just as good as ever, and will be till the end of time. More than nine-tenths of the materials for all plants are taken from the air; less than one-tenth comes from the ground. The business of agriculture is to work over the materials—to use them again as food formers. Carbon, hydrogen and oxygen, as they exist in atmosphere and water, afford no food; are mere air—wind, if in motion,—nothing more. The farmer combines them, as starch, in the kernel of wheat, corn, rye, barley, rice or oats. Thus combined, they form an important office in the support of animal life; and then are pretty sure to find their way back into the next year's crops. All nature is in motion; moves for man's good; will move in spite of him, but will move to better results if he understands her laws and deems himself in accordance. The resources of agriculture are illimitable. A learned Doctor, somewhere south of Canada, we hear, is lecturing, that the world is soon coming to an end. If he can point to a declaration of revealed religion to this effect, we will respect his research. So far as he bases his doctrine upon the alleged fact, that the earth, physically, is waxing worse; that man has almost spoiled it as a residence for human beings; that it can produce food and clothing only a little longer, we take issue with him. Man can no more harm the globe permanently, than the smallest fly can mar the proportions of St. Peter. So far from cultivation having diminished the earth's capability of furnishing food, the contrary is true.—Hitherto the only limit to the production of food has been the non-payment of a sufficient price to remunerate the farmer. We can remember the time, when the lawyer had 50 cents for writing a dunning letter of three lines, and the farmer got three cents for a pound of veal. The time was, when nearly the whole population of our country was employed in agriculture. The perverseness of the British government, in the first instance, and subsequently, an error of our own, was the cause. The manufacturer had no place among us; and the farmer had no protection. A consequence was, that everybody wanted to sell farm produce, and nobody to buy. Let the plow, loom and anvil go together; let but half the community be engaged in agriculture; let the other half be able and willing to pay fair prices; and the earth will show no signs of having become effete. Her capabilities are yet almost intact. Old as agriculture is, compared with other arts, it is yet in its infancy—has hardly begun its work of making the earth what we believe it is destined to be. It is a fact beyond all controversy, that the more the soil is made to produce, by judicious means, the more it becomes capable of producing. It there is a limit to this, it is a great way off—fairly out of sight. Till we come in sight of the limit, we need have no fear of running against. The rule is yet is, the better a region is cultivated, the more productive its soil, the healthier its climate, the more desirable every way. So well convinced are we of this, that we really wish that all who live by fighting, all who live by rascality, and all who find nothing else to do, would mend their lives and go to cultivating the soil.—N. York Observer.

BEEES AND QUAILS appear to have been entirely unknown among the Indians. The quail makes his first appearance when the white man plows and sows his field, and when the Indians see swarms of honey bees they sadly acknowledge that it is time to abandon their pleasant hunting grounds, and seek new homes.

THE RIVER St. Lawrence rises in Lake Superior, and flows through Lakes Huron, Erie, and Ontario, a distance of 3,000 miles, with a width varying from one to ninety miles, and by aid of the Welland Canal, is navigable for ships the entire distance.

The inventor has travelled over many parts of the globe, visiting the principal hospitals, dispensing this Ointment, and curing every disease of the skin, and has thus been the means of restoring countless numbers to health. SORE LEGS, SORE BREASTS, WOUNDS AND SORE THROATS. Some of the most scientific surgeons now rely solely on the use of this wonderful Ointment, when having to cope with the worst cases of sores, ulcers, wounds, glandular swellings, and tumors. Professor Holloway has, by command of the Allied Governments, dispatched to the hospitals of the East, large shipments of this Ointment, to be used under the direction of the Medical Staff, in the worst cases of wounds. It will cure any ulcer, glandular swelling, stiffness or contraction of the joints, even of 20 years' standing. PILES AND FISTULAS. The cans and jars are constructed with a channel round the mouth, near the top, into which the cover fits loosely. This channel is filled with a very adhesive cement, prepared for the purpose and allowed to harden. In order to seal the cover hermetically, it is only necessary to heat the cover slightly, and press it into place. It may be opened with as much ease as it is closed, by slightly warming the top. The ordinary tin cans used for the same purpose for which this is intended, cannot be closed, as is well known without the aid of a tinner, are difficult to open, and are generally so much injured in opening as to be useless for future service. By this simple contrivance, the process of hermetical sealing is placed conveniently within the reach of every individual; and fruit, vegetables and butter (if properly prepared) may be kept, with their natural flavor unimpaired, for an indefinite length of time. For sale by MERRELL & CARTER. Clearfield, Sept. 19, 1855-1y.
