In Clearfield county we have a earth. Atoms of potash and lime are also kind of limestone which when barned and found in raie water. Bone dust is another form by which If man acts properly that part designed him, the farmer can add phosphorus to the soil. (tilling the ground,) i.e., plows deep, they

We will now notice some organic elements will sink low into his field and remain for the of plants. Of all the organic elements of plants nitrogen is most important. It is found largely in gluten, that most nutritious part of wheat; one part of nitrogen and three of hydrogen form ammonia, the most desirable fertilizer. While oxygen and hydrogen are taken into the circulation, through the leaves, and carbonic acid by the leaves and roots, nitrogen, it is believed, is taken up by the roots only, and not in the gase ous form, but when united with hydrogen, or with oxygen (nitric acid or aquafortis-1 atom of nitrogen and 5 atoms of oxygen) forming nitrates of potash, soda, &c. As farmers now know the great importance and value of ammonia, they should also know how to increase its amount on their farms, and how to keep it there. It is very volatile, and readily unites with carbonic and other acids, and while united with the former, it is still volatile, and passes away freely, as the farmer may know by the smell in barn yard manure. The farmer can keep it in his manure heap by sprinkling it from time to time with oil of vitriol; or perhaps a better plan would be to scatter sulphate of lime (plaster of Paris) occasionally. In both cases the sulphuric acid unites with the ammonia and as it is commonly termed "fixes it," i. e. defields in a moderate length of time, and make prives it of its volatility.

Some farmers have made composts in which they have mixed fresh burnt lime with the manure of the stable, the lime having a stronger attraction for carbonic acid than ammonia has, takes it from the ammonia, sets it free and it passes off and is lost. The effect would be the same with guano. To increase the quantity of ammonia, the farmer should economise by saving all his farm yard manure, and not let it lie all summer exposed to the sun and rains. Green manuring, especially with clover or field peas, is a good plan for increasing the ammonia, for they take up a very considerable quantity of nitrogen. The manure of the common fowl is rich in ammonia, and also in phosphorous. It is estimated that ' 3 or 4 hundred pounds of this manure is equal in value, to 16 or 18 wagon loads of stable manure. It will pay to build a house for fowls and in this way their manuro may be collected and saved; this I know from several years experience. Permit me further to engross your attention on the subject of nitrogen. Every farmer knows that each time he works his corn with plow or cultivator, it grows more rapidly for a week or more, though his ground be pretty free from weeds. Why is it so? In this work he does not add manure to the field. The same I am informed has been noticed in growing wheat by sowing it in alternate rows of 3 or 4 feet in breadth, and using the cultivator between them. Does not the crust on the surface of the soil become impervious to the air and the breaking of it let . in the atmosphere, enabling the roots to take up more nitrogen. A scientific gentleman in England. (Mr. Wilkins,) by experiments, has in some degree at least proven this principle. His method is to make a kind of a vat or tank, say 5 feet wide and 20 fect long. He makes a bottom or floor of clay, or other materials impervious to water, about 16 inches below the surface, with sides of the same material 4 or 5 inches high. In this bed or tray there are two drains made on the bottom, with tile or stone, a littie inclined, so as to let any water or other fluid pass to the lower end, where there is a gate or plug to draw off all the fluid in the tank when desired, and let the air pass freely through the whole length of these drains, the removed soil being replaced in the tank over these drains. At the upper end of each drain a tube extends from the bottom to the surface and one also at the lower end of each drain, by which he can know how high the soil is saturated by the fluid in the tank. The seed is sown or planted over these drains. He then uses manures in a liquid form, and some times being offensive, by applying in this way are soon deoderized by the soil; and being applied to the roots of the plants, and being divided into atoms, is soon taken up as proper food for growing vegetables. He found by experiments that the admission of air to the plant, to cause a rapidity of growth at least two days in seven over common culture. Now it appears that this admitting air benefits mostly by the roots obtaining method he gained time, so as to raise two crops of hemp or flax in a year. I FRUIT GROWERS .--- ARTHUR'S PATeat Air-Tight Self-Sealing Cans and Jars, for Preserving Fresh Fruits, &c .- This invention for which a patent has been obtained, commends itself to the attention of Housekeepers and others. on account of its great simplicity, and the effectual manner in which it accomplished a very desirable and useful object BOKER, BROTHERS & JONES,

The cans and jars are constructed with a channel around the mouth, nerr the top, into which the cover fits loosely. This channel is filled with a very adhesive cement, prepared for the purpose and allowed to harden. In order to seal the ves sel hermetically, it is only necessary to heat the cover slightly, and press it into place. It may be Mao, every variety of French and English Shoe Lastings, Patent Leather, Kid and Calf-skins, opened with as much case as it is closed, by slight ly warming the top. The ordinary tin cans, used for the same purpose for which this is intended. aitable for manufacturers. Also, Foreign and Domestic Straw and Silk Bon cannot be closed, as is well known without the aid nets, Leghorn, Panama, and Palin-Leaf Hats, of a tinnsr; are difficult to open, and are generally so much injured in opening as to be useless for future service.

By this simple contrivance, the process of hermetical sealing is placed conveniently within the reach of every individual; and fruit, vegetables and butter (if properly prepared) may be kept, with their sealer invite your attention to our large and varied Stock of Straw Goods, Boots and Shoes, which we are with their natural flavor unimpaired, for an in preparing for the approaching Fall Sales.
