the raftsman's Journal.

THE WORLD, A BARBER SHOP. Our notions lightly knitted up, No one a doubt can harbor That all the world's a barber shop, And every man a barber.

The farmer he's a barber's friend, And ready, in a trice, sir, To lather with a recommend, And shave us with a price, sir, Mechanics, they are barbers, all, Nor lackeys at the play, sir, They lather when for work they call, And shave us for the pay, sir.

The doctor, he's a barber, too, He lathers with a pill, sir, And, many applicants or few, He shaves us with a bill, sir.

The merchant, he's a barber, too, And who than him surpasses He lathers with fine calico,

And shaves the beardless lasses. Our Congress members lately have Assumed the barber's station, And, without lather tried to shave

With double compensation. But, of all the suds-bedaubing host, With razors whet the keenest The lawyer lathers folks the most, And shaves mankind the cleanest.

From Porter's N. Y. Spirit of the Times. BOB GRANT'S COURTSHIP.

Reader, have you ever travelled by steamboat on any of our Western rivers? If so, you have had the greatest opportunity to 'pick up items;' or, in other words, to hear stories, or to be present at the "spinning of hard yarns," if it suit you better, in the known world. Everybody must tell a story, and then everybody else must tell one to match; and so it goes from morning till night, and from night till morning, unless the boat should happen to sink, or the boiler burst. No accident that is not great enough to stop the machinery, can stop the "spinning" machines.

Not long since, I was taking a trip on one of our rivers, when, as might well be expected, I was treated to a large number of racy anecdotes, in most of which the narrators themselves held the most conspicuous position. In the number was one about Bob Grant and his Courtship, which afforded no little merriment. I will give it just as I received it, as near as possible :

"Your story reminds me of one Bob Grant, whom I once knew, and I may say with whom I was very intimate," said the old gentleman to whom I am indebted for the yarn. "Bob was a queer fellow, and rather green withal, and what was still worse, very bashful when among the ladies. One day, I gave him a lecturing about his stupidity-told him it would never do-that he was rapidly approaching that period when he would be looked upon as an old backelor, and be despised by all the gentler sex. I saw it made a deep impression on him, so I went on:

"You had better drop those old bachelor notions, Bob, and get you a wife, before it is seternally and everlastingly too late!" " Bob blushed deeply-looked in all tions to see that no third person was in hearing, and then said :

"To tell you the truth, Arch, I have been thinking something about the matter; but who is there that I could get to have me?"

"Pshaw! you are talking nonsense now," said I. "There are plenty of them, if you would only scrape up courage enough to ask them. For instance, there's Mell Stiasonhow would she suit?"?

"She'd suit to a T. Arch. But you don't pretend to say I could get Mell; do you?" "Get Mell! Why, yes, certainly I do; and I would not be afraid to bet a hundred dollars on it, if you'd only try," said I.

This was a new idea to Bob, and he was tickled almost to death with it. After thinking a moment, during which time his face was illuminated with one of his broadest grins, he ventured to ask me how I would proceed, if I

How he almost cursed himself for having passed so much of his life in ignorance of such

Before Bob had scarcely time to think, and long before he had come to the point, the old clock struck twelve, and Mell reminded him that it was time to retire.

"But I have not told you all I wish," said he. "You can come again next Saturday night." she replied, with a most fascinating smile.

This was capital. Permission to come again! He agreed to retire. Mell told him where he could sleep; and then, as is the custom in some of the Western States, brought a pot of warm water that he might wash his feet. The pot was an old-fashioned one-big at the bottom and little at the top-so very little at the top, that Bob viewed it wish some misgivings, lest it should refuse to admit his feet. Not feeling willing to call Mell's attention to the enormous size of these latter-named articles, he hauled off his shoes, and with one desperate thrust, lodged both feet on the bottom of the vessel. Capital luck, thought he, as he Eternity! why don't you know the meaning sat bathing them. Mell sat near by, waiting of that word? Nor I either, hardly. It is for him to get through, that she might remove forever and ever, and five or six everlastings the pot. At length, the clock struck one. Bob did not seem to notice it, but sat with both feet in the pot, apparently in a brown study. "It is one o'clock," said Mell, by way of a

Two, and then three, were sounded from the old bell, still Mr. Grant paid no attention to it, but maintained his position in silence, apparently resolved to bathe his feet all night. Mell's patience finally wore out, and she said, arising from her chair:

"Mr. Grant, you can retire when you choose. I am going to bed."

"Hold on!" said Bob, "hold on a minute. What's the price of this here pot?" "What do you mean ?" she asked, vastly

"I mean, by thunder! I'm a goin' to break this pot; and I'd like to know the price of it.' "Father! father!" screamed Mell, "come quick !"

Delui.-A wall of gray stone, strengthened by the modern science of English engineers, and nearly seven miles in circumference, surrounds the city upon three sides, while the fourth is defended by a wide offset of the Jumna, and by a portion of the high, embattled, red stone wall of the palace, which almost equals the city wall in strength, and is itself nore than a mile in length. Few cities in the East present a more striking aspect from without. Over the battlements of the walls rise the slender minarets and shining domes of the gates, the balustraded roofs of the higher and finer houses, the light foliage of acacias, and the dark crests of tall date-palms. It is a new city, only two hundred and twenty-six years old. Shah Jehan, its founder, was fond of splender in building, was lavish of expense, and was eager to make his city imperial in appearance as in name. The great mosque that he built here is the noblest and most beautiful in all India. His palace might be set in comparison with that of Aladdin; it was the fulfilment of an Oriental voluptuary's dream. All that Eastern taste could devise of beauty, that Eastern lavishness could fancy of adornment, or voluptuousness demand of luxury, was its suburbs it may contain about one hundred and sixty thousand inhabitants, a little more than half of whom are Hindoos, and the remainder nominally Mahometans, in creed. Around the wall stretches a wide, barren, irregular plain, covered, mile after mile, with the rains of earlier Delhis, and the tombs of the great or the rich men of the Mahometan dynasty. There is no other such monumental plain as this in the world. It is as full of traditions and historic memories as of ruins; and in this respect, as in many others, Delhi bears a striking resemblance to Rome,-for the Roman Campagna is the only field which in its crowd of memories may be compared with it, and the imperial city of India holds in the Mahometan mind much the same place that Rome

Thus, in several of the salt marshes, great quantities of cedar timber is found at some distance below the surface, and quite a number of persons find employment in raising it for making cedar shingles. This timber in ail likelihood grew on the spot where it is now found submerged. as in some places in these marshes, there are still standing trees (withered and bare) which at some period, when the waters did not rise

While returning from the upper part of Moosehead Lake, where I had been lumbering, for each additional insertion. A liberal deduction and when in the vicinity of Mount Kineo, which lies on the western shore of the lake, I heard a cracking noise in bushes before me. It was some moments before I ascertained that the noise was caused by a large moose which was browsing. I silently drew up my piece and fired at his nose, which I could just see through the bushes, but apparently without effect, as he made off at full speed. I pursued him about one hundred rods, when, here, quick! Mr. Grant's gone mad! A TERRIBLE FAMILY .- James Nichols, who is said to have wantonly killed Frank Grier, in Pittsylvania county, Virginia, is reported to have killed his own mother, a few years ago. Another brother, by the name of Arnold, is supposed to have shot his father and killed him, and Burwell, a still older brother, killed mosques, the pavilions and the towers of the Daniel Ashwell. Strange to say, not one of them has been punished.

> BORN TO GOOD LUCK .- Mr. John Martin of London, is being put in possession of the "Jennen's property," which for so very long a period has been without a recognized heir. The cash he inherits amounts to the gigantic sum of $80,000,000, while his income will be $1,-250,000 per annum. That is something like a fortune. The lucky inheritor has been wretchedly poor all his preceding life.

The general character of the Scientific Amerian is well known, and as heretofore, it will be chiefly devoted to the promulgation of informaion relating to the various Mechanical and Chemical Arts, Manufactures, Agriculture, Patents, Inventions, Engineering, Mill Work, and all interests which the light of Practical Science is calcuated to advance. It is issued weekly, in form for binding; it contains annually from 500 to 600 finely executed Engravings, and Notices of American and European Improvements, together with an Official List of American Patent Claims published weekly in advance of all other papers. It is the nim of the editors of the Scientific American to present all subjects discussed in its col-umns in a practical and popular form. They will also endeavor to maintain a candid fearlessness in combating and exposing false theories and practices in Scientific and Mechanical matters, and thus preserve the character of the Scientific American as a reliable Encyclopædia of Useful and Entertaining Knowledge.

Despecimen copies will be sent gratis to any part of the country.
