THE RAFTSMAN'S JOURNAL.

The man who marries happily, may be said to be transported for life.

The young gentleman who flew into a passion has had his wings clipped.

We have heard of a man so witty that his wife manufactures all the butter that the family uses from the cream of his jokes.

Two French ladies, who were in San Francisco when the Japanese arrived there, were anxious to go on board the vessel where the foreigners were. But ladies could not be received. Nevertheless, they put on portions of their husbands' wardrobe and made the visit. They escaped detection while they only talked, for neither party could understand the other; when, however, they shook hands with the Admiral, a peculiar smile passed over his features, and he immediately caused an attendant to dive into his cabin and bring out a variety of hair-pins, bracelets, furs, and other things pertaining to the female toilet. He said, with an Oriental wink at his interpreter, that he could not be mistaken in the pressure of a lady's hand.
