GARIBALDI'S MOVEMENTS.

is generally done, that Palermo is in the hands of Garibaldi. We trust it is now, but the latest news yet received hardly warrants that assertion. It appears that early on the morning of the 27th of May, Garibaldi attacked the north side of the city, and after six hours' contest, kept up under a heavy bombardment from the castle and the Neapolitan ships in the harbor, succeeded in penetrating into it, the royal troops retiring to the eastle, the custom-house, the palace, and other public buildings. In the afternoon the struggle was renewed, and the palace was taken and burned. But the castle still remained in the hands of the Neapolitan troops. Of what occurred in the next three days, we have no accounts. It is stated that Garibaldi intended to attack the castle on the 28th, but whether any attack was made, and if so, what was the result, does not appear. The only further statement is, that on the 31st the bombardment of the town by the castle and the shipping was still kept up. It would seem from this that, although Garibaldi occupied a certain part of the town, the struggle for its possession was still going on. The possession of the castle and of the harbor, whence the city is exposed to bombardment, would still, in a military point of view, leave it in the power of the Neapolitans.
