[Concluded from first page.] anything of the practical operation of our sys-tem. The President of the United States, as the head of a great party, is a very powerful officer. But if without opinions and without men to support a policy, he is no heavier than a feather blown about by every wind. The attempt then to present him to the country as a candidate without distinctive principles on the issues of the day, is either made without good faith, and solely to distract the ranks of the reformers-or, if honestly made, it is purely a sentimental movement, without a partical of practical value in the disposal of a single living question. In either case, a vote given for Mr. Bell would count no more towards any valuable result in our present emergency than if it were thrown away upon any one of us here present.

With respect to the third candidate, Mr Douglas, the same remark cannot be applied to him. He is distinguished for one idea, which he proposes as a sovereign remedy for every existing difficulty. He has repeated it so frequently that there is no excuse for any of us if we do not master it. He is for permitting people everywhere to do as they like about slavery, provided, only, that they have come together and decided the point, under an organic act of some kind or other. To him the difference is wholly immaterial whether they establish or prohibit slavery, whilst living under the United States. He would recognise their action in either case with equal good will. I presume that he would, of course follow out his doctrine to its farther logical consequences, and entertain a similar impartiality if the same community came with polygamy, or incest, or a promiscious intercourse or private assassination, or any other institution of that sort likewise incorporated into their social system. My objection to this doctrine is, that it is sadly defective in morals, and equally unsound in politics. To say that no community would ever be likely to do anything so bad, and therefore that my objection has no practical value, is not a good answer. For the history of the world will show that at one time or another, each of these practices has been legalized by some community. Hence, I am not prepared to sever the cord which in my mind always indissolubly connects great principles of morals with every discussion of legislation and of government. Neither am I prepared to throw to the winds all regard for the fundamental doctrines of the patriots of the last century, which rested the rights of men upon something a little less arbitrary and capricious than distinctions of race which protected liberty against the assault of mere brute force, even though the latter came clothed in all the solemnity of a law of its own making. If these are all the improvements patented by the distinguished Senator from Illinois, they carry but little value in my eye. It may, indeed, be true, that in general their practical effect might be to throw all the new territories into the hands of the more active and enterprising settlers from the free States, who would be sure to destroy slavery by the process of unfriendly legislation; and thus the preponderance of freedom would be permanently established. But there is such a thing as purchasing an advantage at too dear a rate. I must continue to esteem Thomas Jefferson a better legislator than Mr. Douglas, Charles Powers. well as a more comprehensive states He sowed great principles to yield their rich stores of wholesome fruit in all coming time, whilst our contemporary scatters wheat and tares indiscriminately, and with perfect indifference which may grow up the strongest, and choke the other. I know not how it may be with others, but in my humble judgment Mr. Douglas's success would scarcely indicate that restoration of the purest doctrines of the fathers which it is the desire of most of us to bring round. There is, then, but a single safe way of disposing of the present question. That is, to vote for the candidate of a party which is united, and harmonious, and sincerely bent upon an honest and patriotic object—the restoration of the government to its original policy-the establishment of a system of liberty and law. Elect Abraham Lincoln, and you will give to the world a pledge that you have not lost the spirit of your fathers; that you are still, as they were before you, the friends of intelligent and well regulated freedom all over the globe. Philadelphia can do much towards this desirable result. She owes it to herself, to her ancient reputation, to her future fame, to give her helping hand in this emergency, to determine the national policy in a wise and liberal direction, and to confirm the government instead of permitting it to fall into impotent hands or petty factions. I know that you who are here present will do your duty, and so will multitudes who are not within the reach of my voice; and Heaven, in its mercy, grant that your and their truest efforts in this election be crowned with the only success that we desirethe prosperity and the glory of our common

The Prussian papers narrate a pleasing incident which recently occurred at an exhibition of necromancy in Koenigsburg. During an interval, a gentleman rose in the body of the hall, and, pointing to a lady who sat on another bench, addressed the conjurer as follows : "Herr Basch, your next trick, as I see from the show-bill, is to make any person disappear that is pointed out to you. There sits my runaway spouse, with her paramour. Pray make them disappear." The lady turned alternately pale and red, and the couple left amid the roaring laughter of the public.

A Vermont horse-jockey, boasting one day of his horse, gravely asserted that he could trot seventeen miles an hour. "Seventeen miles an hour!" said a bystander, "I guess as how that's a thumper." "My dear fellow," replied the Green Mountaineer, "seventeen miles is no great shakes for the critter, now; for when he was but three years old, the lightning killed the old mare, and chased the colt around the pasture without getting within striking distance of him !"

There is now growing in the gardens of Moorsend, near Cheltenham, England, an extraordinary rose tree, 30 feet in height. It is a perfect picture, and is estimated to have between 18,000 and 20,000 blossoms upon it, being literally smothered in bloom, besides having cast off a whole heap of petals, which lie in a cluster round it, and present the appearance of a bed of snow.

Among the emigrants overland who recent ly passed through Salt Lake City were fifteen unmarried ladies dressed in Bioomer costume. They called upon Brigham Young, visited his gardens and grounds, and expressed much gratification at their reception. They formed part of a Woman's Rights association, and were going to Oregon.

The Rev. A. Brawley, Methodist Superintendent and Missionary in Texas, was hung by a mob a short time since on the charge of being an Abolitionist. The N. Y. Christian Advocate says he was a devoutly pious and inoffen-

Senator Seward gave the true theory of the case, when on being recently asked in relation to the Union movement in New York against Lincoln, he replied, that "the more they unite the more they won't carry it.'.

The Troy Times says that John Morissey has just made a bet of $2,000 hat Lincoln will be elected. He is for Douglas, but preceives that Honest Abe is to be the next President.
