X JOSEPH LANSBERRY. -We see a paragraph in several of the Pittsburg papers announcing the capture of the notorious Joseph Lansberry, at Lake City, Elk county, while purchasing a suit of clothes at a store. We think this is a mistake. A man named James Price, who had been arrested for arson in Karthaus township, this county, several weeks since, and shot the constable in the leg and made his escape, was arrested. we understand, at a clothing store in Lake City, some ten or twelve days ago, and is now in our county jail. This evidently is the man to which reference is made. Lansberry has not been heard of for a long time, and there is little doubt but that he has made his way into Canada, or some other Northern province.

THE CLEARFIELD CASES. -- In the U. S. District Court at Pittsburg, last week, the Grand Jury found "True Bills" against the following persons, in this county, for conspiracy to resist the Draft:

Letter from near Richmond, Va. HEADQUARTERS LIGHT BATTERY A, 1ST) Penn'a Artillery, 24th Army Corps, Manchester, Va., May 3d, 1865.

DEAR Row:-Although, perhaps, somewhat inopportune, on account of the time which has elapsed, yet I propose, as briefly as I can, to continue my narrative of the operations of this organization since I last ad-

On the 24th of March, we were ordered to have everything in readiness for an im-mediate march, but after waiting for some hours, the orders were countermanded, and we have since learned that it was the intention to have us sent to the left with Sheri-dan and Meade. But for the time being we were allowed to remain unmolested.

way for our advance was opened. Late in the afternoon of the 2d information was brought in by deserters, and confirmed by our scouts, that the rebel works on our front were being evacuated, and orders were at once issued for an early advance on the following morning, and at the hour designated we were on the New Market road with faces towards Richmond. Fifteen minutes march brought us to the first line of rebel works; and these passed without the sign of a 'reb' we continued forward with that buoyancy of spirit, which could only arise from the selfevident fact that we were about to realize the full fruition of every hope indulged in during the vicisitudes of three and a half years of active, cruel, and relentless warthat of entering in triumph the rebel capital. At 81 a. m. on that glorious morn, our battery filed within the precincts of the coveted city, being the second to enter-the post of honor being reserved by the Chief of Artillery for his own battery, whose gui-dons were the first artillery colors flung to the breeze in that nest of treason. I need not repeat how very soon after the occupation of the city, the old order of things were reversed, nor with what fiendish malevolence the most business part of the place was fired by the retreating traitors, leaving desolation and famine to greet our approach Every one is now familiar with all this, or have been crowded from the memory by rapidly occurring events. I could not but think, at the time, that the day of our entrance into Richmond was the proudest period of my life, but the glory of that hour was soon destined to be absorbed by the more resplendent lustre of the achievements of the army on the left, under the immediate direction of Grant, which, by the most in-defatigable exertions, succeeded in intercepting the retreat of the army of Lee, and forced that wily chief at last to succomb to superior skill-resulting in the surrender of his whole army on the 9th.

Yet scarcely had the reverberations of the cannon's notes of rejoicing ceased, and while yet the exultant spirit of our army here was at its hight for what had been done, and the bright prospect the event had given us of an early and honorable peace, the astounding intelligence of the assassination of the President of the United States burst upon us like a clap of thunder from a cloudless sky, so increditable did the report at first appear; but when the fearful reality was verified by official despatches from the Secretary of war, astonishment gave way to al most uncontrolable indignation, and loud and deep were the execrations heaped upon the assassin who could thus with fiendish and insatiate thirst imbue his polluted hands in the blood of the Nation's beloved chief.

In an evil hour, our great and good and beloved President, the commander-in-chief of the army and navy, was stricken down by the violent and relentless hand of treason and just as the country was emerging from the toils of a rebellion unprecedented in history for persistency in its unholy work, and when our chief executive was just beginning to witness with evident satisfaction the tri mph of right over wrong, of freedom over layery, then thirty millions of people were eft the mourn the calamity as the greatest single misfortune that ever befel any nation or any people. Not simply has Abraham Lincoln passed from earth to Heaven, but the recognized and adored head of a great nation has been severed from the national body, in which was centered the hopes of millions of his admiring and confiding countrymen, and in whose wisdom was reposed the implicit faith and ability as an instrument in the hand of God, in whom he relied, to bring the country swiftly into a state of tranquility and peace.

In the providence of that God, who controls and directs the destinies of nations as of men, the great and good man who has just fallen at his post, was placed at the helm of the ship-of-state at a time when the waves of sectional fanaticism threatened to engulph her in the maelstrom of destruction, and who, by his coolness in the hour of dan-ger, and by his foresight and his unexampled integrity was largely instrumental, perhaps more than any other man, in guiding that ship through the stormy billows of more than four years of incessant war, and then, just as the shore of peace was looming up under the soft shadows of safety and repose and promising a permanent relaxation from the toils and cares and dangers of his arduous labors, which bore him down with their erushing weight, and against which he struggled with almost superhuman efforts, he is smitten to the earth with the impious hand of the assassin, and the American people overwhelmed with grief and indignation at the heartlessness of such a damnable act. No words of mine, no thoughts that I could pen, can sufficiently express the deep abhorrence and indignation that wells up within my heart at the contemplation of so sad and atrocious an event; and on its announcement here among the soldiers of the 24th corps and, indeed, among all classes of every distinction, was the signal for the soldier must appear before the board, and produce her sworn statement, detailing name of soldier, regiment and company, and when enlismost universal outspoken condemnation which has ever been my fortune to witness. It seemed to me that, as if by magic, all distinctions of caste, all animosities between people of different sections of country springing out of the rebellion were at once leveled, and all, all partook of the solemn grief of the nation. Leading rebels here, those who have an eye single to their personal safety, and who have been largely influential in directing the blows of treason at the heart of the government, were earnest in their condemnation of the inhuman deed, and regarded it as though their bright star of hope of pardon for their crimes was stricken from the constellation David Brown. Elisha Ardery; Lumber crimes was stricken from the constellation city, David Whitmore; Morsis, Jeremiah of their angels of mercy. Well do this class Hoover; Penn; Richard Denvers; Pike, of people realize that, in the great and magtieo, B. Dale, Wesly Horo; Huston, David | nanimous heart of Abraham Lincoln-which was so imbued with the spirit of mercy, and

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE JOURNAL, so foreign to every impulse of resentment towards those who had deluged the land with torrents of the best blood and caused tears of grief and anguish to moisten every hearth-stone throughout the length and breadth of our vast domain-these red-handed traitors had everything to hope for which Christian justice could accord them; and with this faith they rested satisfied that their enormous crimes would be cancelled by their future good behavior towards an indulgent government, and which they knew was strong enough in its inherent power to nurse the adder that would strike it to the heart, or punish it at will.

But why should we murmur at the decrees of God? If in His inscrutable wisdom He has removed the honored head of the nation from among us, as an additional chastisement for our national sins, so He in His On April 3d, however, by the successful wisdom will provide likewise for another ruoperations on the left on the 1st and 2d, the ler who will carry out the inflexible purposes of His own will, and this nation will

> And now, this day, when the remains of the honored dead are being committed to the silent tomb, let us swear anew our allegiance to the nation he loved so well, and died to preserve, that by no act of ours will stern, inflexible justice be withheld from one who dares to lift the sacriligious hand of treason against the fame, the honor, or the life of the Republic. I have learned through private sources, that some there are in Clearfield county, who gave open expressions of their joy at the event. I blush for the memory of such, and fain would I for the reputation of my adopted county, screen them from the obloquy which will ever attach to names so degraded, and souls so blackened by the blight of treason, but I prefer to let them bear the burthen of their impious and intamous words and thoughts themselves, which will reflect upon their memories the blackness of darkness forever. Since our arrival here, I embraced an opportunity offered, and accompanied a party to the old battle-fields of Mechanicsville, Gains' Mills, Fair Oaks, and Cold Harbor, of 1862-going by way of the former place and returning by the Nine-mile road, crossing the Chickahominy at New Bridge. I noticed many things connected with those spots which were familiar to me, and which brought to my mind a vivid recollection of the scenes which were enacted there-myself being an humble actor. We returned to the city weary from long riding, but amoly repaid for all our fatigue.

We are now pleasantly situated at Chesterfield Park, in the suburbs Manchester, opposite the city of Richmond. We are beginning to get tired doing nothing, and now that the war is virtually ended, we turn our thoughts homeward, and long for the time when we may return to the peaceful avocations of life. Yours truly, W. R. B.
