

Craftsman's Journal.

CLEARFIELD, PA., JULY 25, 1866.

The Midland Counties (Pennsylvania) Railway Surveys. We copy the following intelligent letter on an important railway survey from the United States Railroad and Mining Register.

CENTRAL PENNSYLVANIA, July 3, 1866. The great railway survey made under the auspices of the Atlantic and Great Western Railway Company, by Col. James Worrall, consulting engineer, and Col. Jarrett, Mr. Milnor Roberts and Major Rubridge, associate engineers, we understand, has been fully completed and reported upon.

As this was a British enterprise, the intervention of the British commercial panic may interfere to retard construction upon these lines; yet the developments made by the surveys cannot but be of greater value, eventually, to Pennsylvania. The talent engaged in the operation is eminently Pennsylvanian, as the well-known names above quoted will show, and the results may be depended upon—for who should better understand the contour of Pennsylvania than our own Pennsylvania engineers?

The line commencing at the west at a point on the Atlantic and Great Western railway, some four miles west of West Greenville (in Mercer county,) moves eastward by way of Sandy Lake, Big Sandy, East Sandy, Beaver Creek, the Clarion river, and Corsica to Brookville; then up the Sandy Lick to its headwaters. Here the choice of two lines (a northern and a southern alternate) is presented.

The northern line takes Bennett's Branch of the Sinnemahoning to its mouth at Driftwood, following the Sinnemahoning to its mouth, and then the West Branch of the Susquehanna river, occupying its portion of the valley through which the Philadelphia and Erie railroad is constructed, from Driftwood all the way to Milton, where it connects with the Catawissa railroad, finding at that point a railroad connection with New York, about 212 miles long.

The southern alternate, from the heads of Sandy Lick before mentioned, takes down Anderson's creek to the West Branch of the Susquehanna at Curwensville, thence down that stream to Clearfield; then, by Clearfield creek and a branch thereof, makes its way to Phillipsburg, and so across the Alleghany mountain to Bellefonte, whence, rounding the point of Nittany mountain, it reaches Lewisburg via Penn's and Buffalo valleys, connecting there by a short extension with the Catawissa railroad. The two lines, singular to say, are almost identically the same in length—something over 270 miles.

But the northern line has much the advantage in the summation of rises and falls; for, after leaving the head-waters of Anderson, the northern line always descends until it reaches Milton. Whilst the southern line descends to Clearfield, ascends and descends to Phillipsburg, and ascends and descends the Alleghany mountain to Bellefonte, and meets at least one more summit before it reaches Lewisburg.

On the southern line the grade of 51.8 feet per mile is transcended, in more than one locality, going both east and west; whilst on the northern line that ratio is never exceeded, in a direction either with or against the preponderating trade. Although both these lines pass through coal lands for nearly a hundred miles, yet the heaviest veins being the further south, are better accommodated by the more southern than they are on the more northern line; and taking this into consideration, it may be doubted which would prove the most remunerative as an initiatory line.

Both lines should be, and will, eventually, be built, and this survey, we think, will prove that both can be built for a less sum than it was at first estimated a single line between the termini proposed would cost.

It would be esteemed a Utopian idea to build both together; yet, if they can be built, as we understand they can, for a cost falling considerably short of $40,000 per mile, we know of no enterprise more promising than this; and this without considering the saving of distance to New York which this line effects, as against the lines which leave our northern borders for that city. The mineral wealth developed by this great line, and the consequent opening up of such a vast area of primeval forest to agriculture and general business, would prove prodigally remunerative, without considering strategic cut-offs. We have given distances enough in this letter, between well-known points accessible by railway, to afford your readers an opportunity to ascertain how the new line, say from Cincinnati to New York and Philadelphia, compares with the old.

This is a railway enterprise of the first class, and of infinite importance to a vast undeveloped area of our great Commonwealth. It is to be regretted, if it ever was the intention of the British capitalists to carry it out, that anything should have occurred to prevent their doing so, for it may be some time before a party of capitalists can be found who would freely invest ten or twelve millions, promise the investment never so flatteringly.

An old lady, hearing somebody say the mails were very irregular, said: "It was just so in my young days—no trusting any of 'em."

Beauties generally die old maids. They set such a value on themselves, that they don't find a purchaser until the market is closed.

John E. Owens, a liquor dealer of New York, was attacked in a drinking saloon there, and robbed of three thousand dollars.

When a man takes more pleasure in earning money than in spending it, he has taken the first step toward wealth.

Out of 220,000,000 passengers on British railways during the year 1865, only fifteen were killed by accident.

The young prince imperial of France is learning the printing business.

Two hundred British officers yet survive the battle of Waterloo.

The burnt district in Portland comprises eight miles of streets.

A general election in England costs two millions sterling.
