

Craftsman's Journal.

CLEARFIELD, PA., AUGUST 8, 1866.

Looking Up and Looking Down.

A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, writing from Georgia, relates the following: "I was standing in front of my hotel one morning and saw a dozen or more diminutive Africans with slates and books, walking toward the school house, when a well dressed man who was standing near me, turned and said: "Well," said he, "I suppose we must stand it for a while yet, but for how long I don't know. There's that little nigger—and he pointed to a boy about nine years old and black as if he had just emerged from the jungles of the Gold Coast—he is one of mine, or was till the Yankees stole him; he lives at my house now, because I have to hire his mother; he's just as old as my boy, and the Yankee school marm has been training him till he reads better than my boy does. That is a nice pass for things to come to; in a little while these here niggers, after they've learned to read, will be turning up their noses at every white man that can't."

"I told him things were working strangely. "I tell you what it is," he continued, "if this thing ain't stopped we will have to establish ragged schools for every white child, or the niggers will get the upper hand; and that will tax us to death, and besides that, it will establish that sort of mobocracy which prevails in the North, where such a thing as a gentleman is not known, and if one were to go there, they would tar and feather him, but—let's go and take a drink, stranger," said he, changing the subject very suddenly.

"We'd a better not go to war," he once very sensibly added; "we would have ruled the Democratic party all the time," he continued, "with equal truth, and then we could have either controlled the Government, or so far crippled the Abolitionists that they could have done us but very little harm; only run away our negroes—a few hundred a year at most, while now they can get all of them—another punch, barkeeper. When we get fully back into Congress, we will just confirm them old laws against allowing negroes to read, and that will put the matter right; if we can't get our negroes back, we can keep them under."

"One of Gough's stories is a neat hit at those ditiary people who are always behind time. Some one said to a person of this class, "I see that you belong to the three-handed people." "Three-handed! that's rather uncommon." "O no, common enough—two hands like other people—and a little behind hand!"

"Who's there?" said Robinson, one cold winter night, disturbed in his repose by some one knocking at the street-door. "A friend," was the answer. "What do you want?" "Want to stay here all night." "Queer taste of yours, ain't it? But stay here by all means," was the benevolent reply.

Some officious individual asked General Sherman to call on the members of the Southern railroad delegation from South Carolina lately on a visit to Cincinnati, to whom the General replied, "Thank you, no; I did call on the gentlemen once, and I think it is their turn to call on me now."

When Sherman recently passed through Hamilton, Ohio, he struck his head out the car window and asked the name of the place. "Hamilton," was the reply, "and a good many Copperheads here." "Tell the Copperheads to go to Brazil, where they belong," was the general's response.

The youth who follows his appetites too soon seizes the cup before it has received its best ingredients, and by anticipating his pleasures robs the remaining parts of life of their savor, so that his eagerness only produces a manhood of ineffectuality and age of pain.

There was both wit and philosophical religion at least, in what Montesquieu said to the incompetent curate who remarked to him as he was dying, "You understand, Sir, how great God is!" "Aye," replied Montesquieu, "and how very little men are!"

Some of the railway companies are making arrangements to enable all their employees to take out policies of insurance against disability or accident. Would it not be advisable to extend the privilege to passengers over their roads?

"Perpetual complaints are like unto a new cart, which cracks and cries, even while it has no burden bear, its own wheels; whereas, that which is long used and well oiled, goes silently, along under a heavy load."

A man named Seth North died in Detroit lately, whose liver was taken out and weighed twenty-five pounds, the heaviest ever known. It has been preserved and donated to the Michigan Medical University.

Man, says the anatomist, changes entirely every seven years; "therefore," says Jones, "my tailor should not ask me for the bill I contracted in 1858—I am not the same person—hence I owe him nothing."

The largest diving bell in the country was tested at Boston on the 20th instant. It weighed 15,000 pounds, and is designed to build the piers of a railroad bridge over the Merrimac river.

"Aw? how duth you like my moustache, Mith Loh?" hisped a dandy to a merry girl. "Oh! very much—it looks like the fuzz on the back of a caterpillar."

An old woman wants to know, if the compass has a needle of thirty-two points, how long it would take a woman with such a needle to make a shirt.

Beautiful was the reply of a venerable man to the question whether he was still in the lead of the living: "No, but I am almost there."

The popularity of fishing is ascribed to the great uncertainty about the operation, which appeals to the gambling instincts of humanity. Reports from various portions of the North-west indicate that the crops have not been materially injured by the late storms.
