JOHNNY'S OPINION OF GRANDMOTHERS Grandmothers are very nice folks, They best all the aunts in creation; They let a chap do as he likes, and don't worry about education.

I'm sure I can't see it at all, What a poor fellow ever could do for apples and pennies and cake, Without a grandma or two.

Grandmothers speak softly to "ma's"
To let a boy have a good time;
Sometimes they will whisper, 'tis true,
Tather way, when a boy wants to climb. Grandmothe. have muffins for tea.

And pies a whole row in the cellar. And they're apt, (if they know it in time)
To make chicken pies for a reliew. And if he is bad now and then,

And makes a great racketing noise, They only look over their spees, And say, "ah, those boys will be boys, Life is only so short at the best; Let the children be happy to-day '-Then they look for a while at the sky.

And the hills, that are far. far away And then, a boy stopping to think, Will find a hot tear in his eye, Icknow what will come at the last

For grandmothers all have to die. Quite often as twilight comes on, Grandmothers sing hymns very low, To themselves, as they rock by the fire, About Henven, and when they shall go.

wish they could stay here and pray, For a boy needs their prayers every night Such as I, need a wonderful sight.

THE BLUE VEIL.

"Look out for Lizzie in blue veil, by six P. M. train.

"A dollar and twenty cents, sir, and sign your name in the book," said the boy from the telegraph office.

"A dollar and twenty cents, sign my name in the book!" I repeated stupidly; "but this telegram isn't for me."

Yes, sir. It is sent to Mr. Charles Chester, at the Lakeville House, Lakeville, N. Y. There is no other Mr. Chester in Lakeville, so you must be the man. All right, sir. The telegram has just come, and it was so near six that they sent me around with it in a hurry. It has been delayed somewhere in coming from New York, but the fault wasn't her supposition was not incorrect. "When I see Jenny I shall feel it my du-

I paid the boy, snapped the lock of my valise, and drove hurriedly to the depot, duly to look out for Lizzie, and take the night train west. The New York express line had already ar rived, and the iron horse was snorting his impatience to be off. Passengers were crowding into the cars, baggage was rattling by, the bell was ringing-where was Lizzie At length, near the door of the ladies room, looking uneasily around her, I espied a lady wearing the identical blue veil. "Is this the Lizzie whom I am to meet?" I ventured to ask, groaning in spirit at the ignorance in which I had been left regarding my other cognomen. Oh! yes. And this must be Mr. Chester. I suppose. You knew me by my blue veil. did you not? Fred said that would be a sufficient signal. You are very kind to take charge of me. I was fearful that you would find the care of a lady a great burden on a night journey; but Fred insisted that you would not mind it. if you took the trouble for him. So here I am, as you perceive. Are not the cars about starting?"

"I have time to see to your baggage," I managed to sav. "Oh! thank you; but Fred had it checked through, and bought my ticket. It is all

I knew it was all wrong; but what bach-elor of two-and-thirty would decline to escort a charming Lizzie in a blue veil, thus mysteriously committed to his protection?

We had just a minute and a half in which to seeure our seats ere the western train was asked, sweetly. off, and my companion uttered a very contented murmur of satisfaction as we slowly steamed out of the depot. "Oh! I was fearful that you would not the here to meet me, Mr. Chester," she said, and I dreaded to undertake the journey

"It is a long journey," I replied, with a faint hope that I might tempt her to mention her destination.

"Very long," she answered, demurely.
A call of the conductor revealed the fact that the lady was going to Cleveland. My ticket had been purchased for Cincinnati, previous to the reception of that bewildering telegram, and I thought with some satisfaction that I could stop at Cleveland, if I pleased, without any change of route.

As we rode along, I scanned my traveling companion as closely as I dared; but only a suggestion of bright eyes, ruby lips, and a dazzling complexion reached me through the

"Oh! no; but I have heard Fred speak of you so frequently that I do not feel as if we could be strangers long."

She smiled and put up her blue veil. With the veil litted, she looked somewhat older than I had expected. I had fancied she was seventeen, but she now appeared seven-andtwenty. Yet she was so fair, so dazzlingly white-with eyes which matched the blue of her veil—that I forgot the question of age in speculating on the possibility of her being near-sighted. Seated by that radiant vision, I became speedily conscious of my rough coat and shabby man-of-business aspeet, and while I secretly vowed an amendment for all future time, in various particulars, I hoped that she might not prove too the evening train, he telegraphed to you immediately, and hurried me off."

"Ah! Fred," thought I, "it seems to me I have you now. It's just like gay Fred Dalrymple to surprise one with such a telegram, all in the dark, and this must be his sister Lizzie. She is going to Cleveland to visit Robert and his wife; and Fred, hearing that I was to start on my trip to-night, sent his sister along, in my care, without any ceremony." The mystery was explained, and with a lighter heart I turned to the young lady, stimulated by this discovery to make myself desperately agreeable.

"How is your dear Jenny?" suddenly inquired my comrade of the blue veil. "Mydear Jenny!" mused I. "Oh! yes; sister Jane, I presume she means."

"She is very well," I replied.
"We have so often exchanged messages with our love, through the medium of your correspondence with Fred, that I feel quite well acquainted with that dear Jenny, Mr. Chester.'

"Humph!" I said to myself, "just like Fred Dalrymple to forget to deliver his sister's messages, and then to invent replies to satisfy her questions and cover his negli-

"And do tell me something about that baby," continued Fred's sister. "You need not be afraid of praising it to me, for you in babies.

To be sure!
"I would gladly gratify you if it were possible," I replied; "but, to own the truth, I seldom take much notice of the baby race.' "As if I should believe you in this particular instance!" returned my interlocutor, gaily. "Why, somebody told Fred that you burned the gas all night, on purpose to see how cunning that wonderful baby looks when asleep.

"Me!" I exclaimed in horror.
"Yes. You need not deny it," said she. "I can readily understand that bashfulness conceals your raptures. Of course it is named for you?"

It happened that sister Jenny's youngest child had been christened Charlie in honor of his bachelor uncle, and so I answered that "You must not expect to manufacture a baby worshipper out of an old bachelor," I said, jestingly, "Oh, no; but young fathers are not such sublime savages as you would try to have me me believe!

'Gracious! what can she mean?'' was my silent ejaculation. As she did not seem inclined to rally me further, we fell into quiet converse of commen-place themes, very much as if we had been a half dozen years acquainted. "We are to ride all night," I said finally. "and ought I not to secure a berth for you in the sleeping car? I notice that you seem very much fatigued." "I am weary, but I detest those sleeping "So do I the same," was my hearty re

But it would be a great pleasure to me, if you could be as comfortable, to have you accept my shawl, and my arm for a pillow, and make yourself cozy for the night.

"Do you think that Jenny will not object to my accepting such a service of you?" she "Certainly, Jenny will not object," I assured her. I would gladly have added that Jenny would not object, on some future day, to be presented with a sister-in-law wearing a blue veil, but I hardly dared to hazard the suggestion while our acquaintance was still of so recent a date.

She took off her bonnet -a dainty bit of millinery-which I regarded with a species of silent awe, and scarcely ventured to put it in the rack above us. Then the blue veil was tied over her curls, and resting her head upon my shoulder, the beauty was soon

"Oh! very much. You are exceedinly kind to have taken such care of me. Fred-told me that Jenny's husband would be a most desirable escort, but I find that he scarcely told me half the truth."

ENCOUNTER BETWEEN AN ELEPHANT AND ty to tell her what heartless indifference you A RAT. - A very extraordinary encounter between a rat and an elephant ken place at the Garden of Plants in London, which was witnessed with interest by hundre ls of persons.

The keepers were engaged in destroying a great number of rats, when one escaped and ran to the place allotted to the elephant. Seeing no other refuge, in the twinkling of an eye the rat snugly ensconced himself in the trunk of the elephant, very much to the elephant's dissatisfaction. He stamped his feet and twisted his trunk around like the sail of a windmill.

After these evolutions, he stood suddenly still, evidently considering what was best to do. He then ran to the trough where he is accustomed to drink, and plunged his trunk into the water, then returned to his den, and raising his trunk, with the water he absorbed, he dashed out the unfortunate rat, which was in a sheet of water like that issuing from an engine. When the rat fell to the ground, the elephant seized him, and made him undergo the immersion and projection four times. At the fourth throw it fell dead. The elephant, with a majestic air, but cool and placid, crushed his annoying little enemy with his foot, and then went round to the spectators to make his usual collection of cakes, sugar and other dainties. what you don't need. Montpilier. Indiana, in a letter, denies that old Grimes is dead, and says:

"A few days ago I visited an old Revolutionary soldier by the name of Girmes, living in Wells county, Indiana, who says that his age is 113 years. He entered the American army at the beginning of the struggle, that he'll live long enough to know how and served with honor through the war, was many cents there are in a dollar; if he don't under the immediate command of General he's pretty sure to bequeath that privelige Washington, and participated in almost to his widow. ALWAYS TELL THE TRUTH. - The ground work of all manly characters is veracity, or the habit of truthfulness. That virtue lies at the foundation of everything said. How common it is to hear parents say, "I have faith in my child so long as he speaks the truth. He may have faults, but I know he will not deceive. I build on that confidence." They are right. It is lawful and just ground to build upon. So long as the truth remains in a child, there is something to depend on; but when truth is gone, all is lost, unless the child is speedily won back again to veracity. Children, did you ever tell a lie? If so, you are in imminent danger. Return at once, little reader, and enter the stronghold of truth, and from it you may never depart again.
