CLEARFIELD, PA., WEDNESDAY, MARCH 11, 1868.

Select Poetry.

ONE YEAR AGO. One year ago to-night, love, When first I met your smile. The stars were shining bright, love, I was happy all the while.

One year ago to night, love, Fond memory bears me back To cares that were so light. love, Along our youthful track.

You bid me not dispair. love, That fame would crown my brow, To ease my every care. love, You bid me humbly bow.

But changes they have come, love, Like clouds that dim the sun, They crossed our path of pleasure, love, Our hopes, our joys were done.

One year ago to-night, love, How sad it sounds to me ; The world is not as bright, love, . As when I strayed with thee.

Yes, sad to think another year. Will quick ly pass us by. And frien'ls we love will soon decay As flowers that bloom to die.

ZENAS CAREY'S REWARD.

Red and sullen like the eye of some baleful demon, the low sun glowed through the tangled depths of the November woods casting bloody lines of light across the falen trees, whose mossy trunks were half hidden in the drifts of faded yellow leaves, and evoking faint, sweet scents like Orient sandal wood and teek, from a thousand forest censors hidden away, who knows how or where. And through that line of dull flauing fire the sky frowned-a leaden gray concave, freighted, as the weatherwise would tell you with snowflakes sufficient to turn that broken forestinto a fairy grove of pearl to be shot down in battle to be missed and and ermine. So the daylight was ebbing away from this Thanksgiving eve.

'Now I wonder where I am?" said John Siddons, pausing abruptly in the scarse visble footpath that wound among the trees. "As completely 'turned around' as though right road; these short cuts generally turn out long ones. However if I keep straight ahead I must mevitably emerge from these woods somewhere."

He sat down on a mossy stump, leaning other played unconsciously with the worn ing face of the old farmer an instant and property, and that's a pretty consid'able then accepted the invitation without anoth- windfall !"

er word. What a cheerful change it was, from the frosty air chill twilight of the lonely road to that bright kitchen with its spotless board floor and resinous pine logs. And when Melinda Carey drew a hump-backed rock-"Peter Ailesford wa ing chair to the hearth for him, and spoke a word or two of welcome. John Siddons wondered if the eyes of his mother who died when he was a babe had not . beamed upon him then. "I told mother so, this very morning," said Zenas, with a triumpant flourish of his hand, as he stirred up the logs to a waving glorious sheet of flame. "Says I Melinda, we'll kill the biggest turkey, and I'll pick "I was in search of Mr. Ailesford's house when I met you, sir," said Siddons turn-ing to Cary; "but as I was unaware what And says she "what for Zenas when floor." there's only two to eat 'em ?" and says I 'Mother, David was here last Thanksgivdon't cry.'

Zenas interrupted himself to stroke his touch, and went on :

"Says I "He's gone where its Thanks-

And now, sir, you'll spend the morrow with us, and tell us about the battle of Gettysburg, where David died, crying with his last breath not let the flag be captured 1'

Zenas's voice died out into a choking gasping sob. John Siddons laid his hand softly on the rough toil-hardened hand of the old farmer, while a pang of envy shot through his heart. Ah! it was almost worth while mourned like dead David Carey.

"Oh, wife" wailed Zenas, when John Siddons had fallen asleep in the little corn- do not turn me from your hearts !' er room that had been the lost boy's, "it is almost like having David back again! Wife, I fight my sgreat sorrow down every I stood in the deserts of Egypt! I wish I night, but every morning it comes up again had been sensible enough to keep to the more than ever !-God help those whose home is made desolate by the field of battle !' Thanksgiving dawned with a white whirlwind of driving snow that eddicd among the gnarled boughs of the apple trees in their his head carelessly on his hand, while the mad frolies, and edged the old stone wall with dazzling ermine. And the fiery sparks chunney met the steady lander snow han way and gave battle, while the hearth glowbronzed forehead, which had been touched ed with ruddy brightness, as if it knew all by the fiery arrows of many a Southern sun about the Governor's Proclamation and approved of it. "You have a cozy little farm here, Mr. Carey," said John, as they walked through the snow storm to the church, whose spire nestled among the everlasting hills beyond. "If I were only sure of it, sir," said Zenns with a sigh. "But I've been hard put to it to get a long these times. Taxes and such like come heavy on poor men, and I've had a run of ill luck so that the place is mortgage1 to its full value, and to a hard man-one that will sell the home you've been brought up in as soon as eat his breaktast, so he can make money by it. It will be a black day when Melindy and me have to leave Rock farm ; but it must come soon, probably kick me out of doors for a shiftless and I don't care what becomes of me afterwards. I tell you sir, when a man has liv; ed to my age under one roof tree he don't take very kinaly to bein' moved. Men are like forest trees sir; you can take a young one and do as you please, with it, but if you transplant an old 'un it dies. Let's talk of something else, Mr. Siddons, I oughtn't to complain Thanksgiving day. John looked with a feeling of actual reverence at the hard featured old man whose simple soul borne down as he was by debt, and grief, and age, could still find something to be thankful for. The turkey and pumpkin pies were smoking on the round table when John and Zenas returned from church ; and Mrs. Carey had brought out her' flowing blue' plates and her choicest old time silver spoons in honor of her guest. There was no beverage but coffee that never knew the shores of Java, and a pitcher of cold sparkling eider; but champagne could not have been more cordially dealt out by Zenas; and Mrs. Carey's smiling kindness gave a flavor to the chickorized rye that is sometimes lacking in 'egg-shell china.' The table was cleared away, and they were sitting around the fire, when the door was opened, and Deacon Evarts entered, bringing a small snow-drift on the shoulder of his shaggy overcoat. "Well I am beat !" quoth Zenas. "Take a chair, Deacon. Let me hang your coat afore the fire to dry.' "Can't stay," said the Deacon. giving himself a shake, like a black water-dog on his hear the news, so I jest dropped in on my worth having. way to my darter's Thankgiving dinner."

"Was that name Siddons?" asked the soldier, who had hitherto listened to the conversation in silence.

"That's it !" said the Deacon, giving his "Peter Ailesford was my father's cousin, out the yallerest pumpkins on the barn sort of reception I might get, your kind invitation decided me to wait a day or two.' In vain the Deacon tried to "pump" the young soldier. John Siddons was civilly ing, with his new uniform, as brave and uncommunicative, and the Deacon finally handsome as you'll often see-now mother took leave burning to unfold his budget of news elsewhere.

"I hope, sir," said Cary, uneasily, when wife's gray hair with a strangely tender they where once more alone, "you won't be hard about that mortgage. I'm a poor man, and

"Mr. Cary," said John quietly, you shall burn that mortgage on this hearth the very day I come into possession of my relative's papers. No thanks, sir; I have not forgotten that I was a "stranger, and you took me in." Do you suppose that I shall ever cease to remember the welcome of the Thanksgiving hearth? I never knew either father or mother, but to-day I have fancied what their kindness might have been. "It was for David's sake !" sobbed Mrs.

Carv. fairly overcome. 'Then for your dead son's sake will you

"The Lord bless thee-the Lord make his face to shine on thee, my second son, said the old man solemnly.

Slowly the dusk gathered athwart the hills, with wailing winds and whirling drifts of snow-slowly the darkness wrapped them round ; but in Zenas Carey's steadfast soul the light of an eternal Thanksgiving was burning; and his wife with tearful eyes, mused upon her two soldier boys-one dead at Gettysburg, the other sitting at her side.

to himself. "'I wonder how many others are saying the same thing this Thanksgiving eve. To think that I should pass through the campaign unhurt, and return with an honorable discharge in my pocket to a place where no one knows or cares whether I am alive or dead, while so many brave fellows were shot down by my side with bullets that tore through a score of hearts at home, carrying sharper pangs than death has to give! its a queer thing to have only one relative in the world, and he a total stranger. But hang it, a man can't live alone like a tortoise in his shell. remember wondering, when I was a boy, why the Madeira vines over the porch stretchd out their green tendrils, and seemed to grope through the sunshine for something to cling to. 1 think I understand it now.

He rose up and walked on through the russet leaves that rustled ankle deep beneath his tread, still musing-musing; trying to study out the unknown quantities in life's great equation while the sun went down behind a bank of lurid clouds, and the chill hight wind began to sigh sorrowfally in the tree tops. And suddenly the sturdy woods tapered off into a silver stemmed thicket of white birches that fringed a lonely country road with a little red house beyond, whose windows were aglow with firelight, and whose door yard was full of the peculiar perfume of white and maroon-blossomed chyrsanthemums.

Zenas Carey was leaning over the gate surveying the stormy sunset with critical eyes.

"I told Melinday so !" ejaculated Zenas, apparently addressing himself to the crook-ed apple tree by the road. "I'll bet my best steer we have a good old fashioned fall of snow to keep Thanksgivin' with. I smelt It in the air this mornin', but women don't never believe nothin' until it comes to pass right under their noses, for-"

This rather obscure sentence was nipped in the bud by a footstep at his side. Zenas turned abruptly to reconnoitre the new arrival.

"Will you be kind enough to give me a glass of water, sir?" asked John Siddons, wearily.

Sartin sir !" said Zenas. "So you're a soldier, hey?"

"A returned soldier," said Siddons, draining the cool element from the coca-nut shell that always iny close to the well at the side of the house.
