EVENING. Softly sets the sunset breeze.

Vesper bells are ringing;
O'er the earth on bended knees,
Night her veil is flinging. Oh! how weary feels my soul,
Now within her prison!
Hush! be still, ye thoughts of dole, Whence bave ye arisen?

Homeward yearns the captive heart— Yonder where so brightly Gleam the stars; it longs to part From this earth unsightly.

Gently fades the evening red, Vesper chimes are dying; Nature breathes a hely dread, Hushed is e'en her sighing.

Lost I stand upon the iga, Night has closed around me; Still as death is main and sea— God! their spell has bound me. Fainter beats my pulses all, Dreamy visions haunt me; Would that from this blessed thrall Naught could disenchant me!

THE DARK HOUR BEFORE DAY.

"It's no use Becky," said the little lame cobbler, dropping his head upon his hands and looking as he felt, the personification of despair. 'T've offended the Lord somehow, and He won't let me have a chance to keep a home over your heads. I know I'm not at all as I ought to be, and I'm punished."

Becky went across the room and patted her husband on the back.

"Now don't take on, Nick, don't," said she. . "That can't be, for He knows all, knows how good you are. Better times'l come. They're sure to; and you'll be rewarded for all your patience yet. The darkest hour is just before day.

The cobbler shook his head. "I've gin up hope, Becky," he said,
"What with the rent, and the bill for medicine. It was like me to get sick just at the shop with the gilt sign tempting folks from our shabby basement even for the mending of their old shoes. I'm crushed down. Why you are as thin and white as a ghost. You haven't tasted meat this week, Becky."

"No more have you," said Becky, "But upset the toddler. la. why there is folks thinks many that and wink her up, some. Wegetarians, Nick, they call em; where I lived out once I saw one.' "Did he say bread wasn't unhulsome too?" asked Nick. "Oh, gal, I wish I'd left ye living out at service. Rosy and bright and happy; but I meant to do better, I did. It I was an able bodied man, I'd work somehow and somewhere, but it's the last or nothing with me. Becky, why didn't you take Tim Rolf, the wheel-wright, and send the little limping cobbler about his business?"

"I didn't like Tim," said Becky, "and I just knew how nice and cozy we'd be together. Never a quarrel Nick. And how we used to go to Hoboken and have lemonade in the garden, and come home after dark a any one.

"Used." sighed poor Nick. "Why it can't be all up hill," said Becky. "I havn't time to go out gallivanting now but la, I don't miss it. We're steady mar-"Oh, Becky," said the cobbler, "you try to keep up heart, but you know it's come to starving.

They looked at each other, and then Becky put her arms about her husband. She did not weep upon his bosom; she was so big and strong, and he so small and frail, that it only seemed natural to reverse matters. She hugged him up to her shoulder. and covered his head over with her apron. and put her cheek down outside the bundle thus made, and soothed and patted him as if he had been a baby. But she cried too, and the apron was wet through in no time. It was a bad state of things. No money, no food, no fire, and winter at its coldest. The children were sent to school breakfastless for the sake of the warmth and comfort of the school-house. No work to be had; the little cobbler as helpless as man could be, except at his trade and Becky's washing stopped, for Heaven only knew how long, by a great felon in the palm of her right hand. But Becky loved the queer little mortal she had married, so well that she stopped crying first, and kissed him between the eyes—great frightened light blue eyes, that seemed made for crying.

"You stay at home and mind the place, she said. "I'm going out awhile. Perhaps there'll be a bit of luck—who knows." She put on her bonnet and shawl-such thin little shawl-which had been used for an ironing cloth, and had an irone-shaped scorch between the shoulders-and took up a basket. The cobbler looked at her. "Becky," he said hoarsely, "Becky."

She knew just what he meant. "The little children, Nick," she said "we could starve-but them poor little critters. Nick, it won't seem like begging when it's for them."

And then the door shut behind her and poor Nick limped after her, as though to stop her; then paused, and fairly flung himself on the floor, wishing he were on the ground beneath it.

'God forgive the man that marries a woman to starve her," he sobbed. "Why if I'd known it would have come to this, I'd Smith—though "Mis" might be anything never have courted her. It's time I was

Perhaps, being a strange, impulsive little fellow, there might have been a tragic end to this scene, but that the children came from school, and began to cry-partly at the sight of their prostrate father, partly because of hunger—and Nick forgot himself to do

kid. Only the youngest chewed the kid. | And the fact that "mother" and the basket were gone together impressed them with the hope of provisions.

Meanwhile, Becky had gone begging. It was one thing even more terrible, not to Door after door was slammed in her face. Once a dog was set at her, or she thought so. Professional beggars had made themselves nuisances to many people, and how were they to know when real poverty asked alms. Men whom they had pitied as paupers proved to be owners of real estate. Cripples and blind men whom they had aided were found to have bound up strong limbs and glued their eyes together—so they were hard upon real distress and refused its broken a street corner with one crust in her basket-

Beyond lay a pawnbroker's shop, and Becky looked at it's golden balls and her wedding ring. She had worn it fifteen years, and it was thin and frail, but pure gold. Through all she had kept it until now. Must it go? The thought was worse than begging.

Becky took a step forward, another back, Then she began to cry a little. Nick's ring that he put on her hand so long ago-oh dear! oh dear!

But she grew brave again, and walked into the shap and pawned the ring. It was not Becky noticed this, saying to herself that they were never fairly come by. And a little silver voice of a thread answered: "I cant find mamma. I cant find my home Where is mamma? Oh, mamma! Becky knelt down. A white head of crumpled curls, and a pair of blue eyes, and swimming in tears, she could just make Becky took it in her arms, and made inquiries at the corner grocery, where painfully reminded him of her coffin. she bought a slice of ham; but no one on Sunday morning in clothes as good as and Becky would not leave the child to its and our readers must imagine the rest.

"I'll take it home," said she "and tomorrow find its folks.

So when the cobbler and his children saw the door open at last, there entered by it, not only their mother and a basket, but a baby also.

A new baby came frequetly to that establishment; and the children, in their juvenile view of such matters, opineed that they had another little sister.

"It's a poor lost child," said Becky. 'I'm going to keep it to-night. It's parents are poorer than we are, you can see that by its bare feet and only one little frock poor thing! Now hold her, Nick, while I cook supper. I didn't beg it Nick, so don't fret. And then, keeping her ring-finger out of sight, Becky fried the ham, and made gravy, and cut bread, and sent for two cents worth of milk-which judiciously diluted, made a quart of milk and water, and tried to be very cheerful. The lost child cried, but Becky fed it, and soon coaxed it to talk; then came a story of a "bu' dess," and a "nassy woman." The youngest, who had chewed the red kid, acted as interpreter. Soon it was discovered that some woman, described as "nasty" had taken away the childs blue dress, and other garments, and then had whipped her. Becky listened intently: "That dress was blue, Nick," she cried. I knew it wasn't hers-a tipsy, ragged woman; and folks that own them don't come pawning. I-"

Then she paused-the secret was out. Nick's eye had glanced toward the wedding ring, and back again to her face.

Oh, Becky!' he cried. "Becky we now it's out; I'm married all the same, thank God. It was at the pawnshop I saw the blue dress." And she told them of the woman whom she had watched and of her suspicions. "The child has been stole, Nick," she said, "It's a genteel child, you can see; and if we can but find it's name out, we may save some one trouble, we've never had. Think of one of ours being gone all night, Nick."

else; and putting the children all to bed, all in a row, like the little Ogres in fairy tales, save that they had no crowns on, Nick and his wife started for the pawnbroker's.

The man was good natured, and looked at the garments. They were marked, M. S. "I'm right then." said Becky. "They are the child's, and they have been stole. And replied the maiden. if we can but find its poor mother, we'll

And out went Nick and Becky to queswould be horrible, no doubt, she thought, to tion the policemen, until at last despairing take food from strangers, but she found there of an answer, they were turning homeward, when a blaze of fight from an open door tell over them, and they saw on the steps a weeping woman and a tall handsome man.

"Hush; we will find her if she is alive," said the man. "My precious little Minnie," cried the woman.

Then Nick and Beeky gave a sort of little cheer in unison.
"It's them," said Becky; "them certain sure. Oh, mum, if your name is Smith, and you've lost a little girl, we've found her.'

And then the cobbler and his wife were bread. At six that evening Becky stood at pounced upon and the story told. In half an hour the six little Ogres without crowns were aroused from their slumbers by an arrival, and the odd baby in their midst was taken out, to their distress and consternation, for they had counted on keeping her.

And Nick and Becky forgot their own troubles in the parent's joy. And Nick said it was like "poetry," and Becky said it was like "a play,

And so it was -one with a happy endingfor what should the lady do but beg and pray Becky to tell her what she would like best, and Becky confessed that to have her wedding ring back was the hope of her life; much they gave for it, but it would buy and this led to the cause of its pawning and supper, and perhaps Nick wouldn't notice, and perhaps she could get it back. That was a very faint "perhaps," however.

"So it's never time thrown away to do a kindness to any one," says Becky often; "for somehow you are always rewarded for it. If I had left the little lost beggars child as I thought it, in the street and never stop-Becky was soft of heart; but in poor ped to care for it-as I might have done in quarters, crying children are common enough such trouble where would Nick have been and her own were waiting for the loaves in her basket. > A GOOD ARTICLE .- "Doctor, that ere rat bane of yours is first-rate," said a Yankee to an arothecary.

sockets, "what, another pound?" "Yes, sir; I gin the whole of that pound I bought the other day to a pesky old rat and it made it awfully sick, and I am sure another pound would kill it right out."

The latest swindle is a Rochester invention. When hay is sold by the ton, a man conceals himself in the load and is weighed with it. While the load is driven to the barn of the purchaser, the man goes back to the hay-market to be sold over. The Union of that city says: "This trick was not discovered until a few weeks ago, though it is now understood that it has been practiced for years. It might have remained undiscovered for years to come but for the boldness of the operators, who exposed themselves and were noticed by mechanics em-ployed in laying up the wall of buildings adacent to the haymarket."

A young man who had gained the affec-tions of a daughter of Prof. Wilson, waited on papa and stated his case, of which the Professor had a previous inkling. The young gentleman was directed to desire the lady to come to her father, and doubtless her obedience was prompt. The Professor had before him, in review, some work, on the fly-leaf of which was inscribed: " Tearing this out, he pinned it to his daughter's dress, solemnly led her to the young lover, and went back to his work.

Many a hand that can skilfully use the sledge-hammer would not be able to regulate the machinery of a watch. Nice are the springs of immortal souls, fine are the threads woven into the web of destiny, and divinely skilled should be the hand which directs the work. Would you trust a bungler to regulate a nice piece of mechanism? Would you trifle with the springs of natural life? How much less should they be trusted with Street, Philadelphia, Pa. immortal souls.

Dr. Jackson-Dear Sir: I have been frequently requested to connect my name with recommendations of different kinds of medicines, but regarding the practice as out of my appropriate sphere, I have in all N cases declined; but with a clear proof in N various instances and particularly in my own family, of the usefulness of Dr. Hoodand's German Bitters, I depart for once from my usual course, to express my full conviction that, for general debility of the system. and especially for Lever Complaint, it is a safe and valuable preparation. In some cases it may fail, but usually, I doubt not, it will be very beneficial to those who suffer from the above causes.
