THE FARMER'S WIFE.

Oh' give me the life of a farmer's wife In the fields and woods so bright. Mong the singing birds and the lowing herds, And the clover blossoms white The note of the morning's heavenward lark Is the music sweet to me; And the dew flowers in the early hours, The gems I love to see !

Oh! give me the breeze from the waving trees. The murmur of Summer leaves; And the swallow's song as he skims along Or twitters benoath the eaves;

The plowman's shout, as he's tarning out

His team, at set of sun. Or his merry "good night" by the fire-fly light When his daily work is done.

And give me the root and luscious fruit. That my own hands rear for food ;

And the bread so light, and the honey white, And the milk so pure and good; For sweet the bread of labor is, When the heart is strong and true, And a blessing will come to hearth and home If our best we bravely do.

THE TWO OLERKS.

In Market Square, in the pleasant city of Merryport, was a crockery-ware store, over the door of which was a black sign bearing in gilt letters, the name of Benjamin Hudson. For many years this crockery-ware store had been there, with the great picture hanging in front for a sign; indeed, when Mr. Hudson first opened the store, some forty years previous, he was quite a young man, and the sign over his door was very bright and handsome; but now his eyes had grown dim, and the owner was called "Old Hudson" by all the boys and of the city.

The windows of that store had great attractions for all the children that passed that way. There were beautiful vases, and handsome China mugs with "Ellen," "Fan-"William," and lots of other names ny, inscribed upon them ; there were also plates with pictures on them representing Franklin's maxims; and funny clocks, shaped like dogs, that would roll their eyes back and forth every time they ticked; and many other things eurious and ornamental. Mr. Benjamin Hudson had grown rich in his business, for he conducted it all himself, and took care that nothing should be wasted or lost by neglect. He had made mistakes to be sure, as every man will make some blobe sure, as every man will make some blunders in a lifetime; but by skillful man-agement he quickly recovered from them. Sixty-five years had begun to bend over Mr. Hudson's shoulders, and dim the brightness of his eyes, and he found business more irksome than it formerly had been.

"I must have a partner," said he one day by a table, on which were writing materials. You look very cozy here, Herbert, but why do you have an attic room? Are there none that you can have below stairs?' "O, yes, sir; but this room is a dollar per week cheaper, and I have all the more mon-ey to send to my father," said Herbert. "Isn't your father well off?" inquired Mr. Hudson.

"Not very, sir; he used to be pretty rich, but his business was disastrous, and he lost a great deal of money," said Bond. "What do you find to do evenings? Does not the time hang heavy?" "Oh, no sir. I have books to read, and letters to write. To-night I am writing home; they want me to make them a visit; but I write father that it is a pretty busy perceived in all its greatness. time just now, but when it is over [ shall ask you for few days absence," answered Herbert.

"No sir. I have asked him to do so several times, but he has never called.'

"Are you contented with this boardinghouse ?"' inquired Mr. Hudson.

"It is a very good boarding house, and Mrs. Buntin treats me very kindly; but I things, for we hoped ever that he might use often wish that I could live at home with or occupy them. But now the dreadful vamy father and mother," answered Herber... "And why can't you?" asked his employer.

"It is twenty-five miles sir ; rather far to travel every day; and then I cannot afford the expense," was Herbert's reply. "What time should you reach the store in the morning?" "At half past eight sir."

hour in the afternoon?'

"About half past five, sir." "Not very bad hours for business. Perhaps it can be arranged so that you can live at home, Herbert." "O, I should like it so much.if I could; I am so homesick here in the city ?" was the clerks reply. "Well I'll look into the matter, Herbert.

It seems a pity that one who is so fond of his home can't live there, in these times of rail-ways and fast traveling," said Mr. Hud-son; as he rose to depart. Herbert thanked him for his visit, and said that it would please him to see Mr. Hudson often. The old gentlemen descended the stairs, well satisfied with the result of his call, and said to himself: "Now for Charles Sey-more. I hope I shall find him as well occupied as Herbert Bond."

After the Funeral.

Of all the returnings, that one "after the funeral" is the saddest. Who will say it is not so, who has followed a beloved one to the grave? While he was sick we went in and out, anxious, sorrowing, suffering. The solicitude to relieve, and care for, and comfort him, engrossed us; the apprehension of our own dissolution, in case he should be removed from us, almost drove us wild.

While he lay dead under the home roof, there was a hurry and bustle in preparation for the final rites. Friends are sent for, neighbors are present, the funeral arrangements are discussed, the mourning procured, the hospitalities of the house provided for; all is excitement; the loss is not yet

But "after the funeral," after the bustle has subsided and things begin to move on as usual, then it is we begin to know what "You shall have it willingly," said Mr. Hudson; and then he added, "D es Charles ever call upon you?" the room where he struggled and surrendered in the last conflict. There are his clothes, books hat, and cane, there his ever-vacant seat at the family board. During his sickness we had not so much noticed these cuity is everywhere. Oh how dark and cheerless the night shadows come down after the funeral. No moon or stars ever shone so dimly; no darkness ever seemed so utterly dark. The tickings of the clock resound like bellstrokes all over the house. No foot-step now on the stairs or overhead in the sick chamber; no nurse and watchers to come "And you would have to leave at what our in the afternoon?" "No, indeed, you may sleep on now "About half past five, sir." heart! It will be long before the sweet rest you once knew will revisit your couch, or slumber will bring again the scenes through which you just have passed, and you will start from it but to find them all too real. God pity the mourner "after the funeral."

"No Secret, Doctor."

"I noticed," said Franklin, "a mechanic, among a number of others, at work on a house erecting but a little way from my office, who always appeared to be in a merry humor; who had a kind and cheerful smile for every one he met. Let the day be ever so cold, gloomy, or sunless, a happy smile danced like a sunbeam on his cheerful countenance. . Meeting him one morning. I asked him to tell me the secret of his constant business who is young and active, and will take the weight from off my shoulders, for I cannot do as I used to do.' Now, in Mr. Hudson's employ were two young men-Herbert Bond and Charles Seymore. They had been with him an equal length of time, and had performed their duties faithfully and well. Charles did his work quickly, and had a smart way about him that made people think he was greatly superior to Herbert, who had a more quiet demeanor, and accomplished quite as much without making a great stir about it.

"I must have either Herbert or Charles for a partner," soliloquised Mr. Hudson; "which one I cannot decide. They both do very well in the store, but I ought to know something of them out of the store, and I am very sorry to say that that is a point I have never paid proper attention to. My clerks come here in the morning and go away again at night; what becomes of them over night I know not, and yet I ought to know. Neither of them have parents in the city, they live in some of the numerous boarding houses, and I hope are steady and well behaved. I must see them in their homes, and decide which one I shall have for my partner.'

The next day Mr. Hudson ascertained the boarding places of his two clerks without letting them know for what purpose; and after supper that evening his wife and daughters were somewhat surprised to see him go to the hall, and put on his coat and hat. 11"Where are you going, papa?" asked Lilly. the youngest daughter, who could hardly remember the evening when her father had not remained at home. "I am going to make a call, Lilly, on two young men of my acquaintance, but I shall not be gone long," replied Mr. Hudson, and bidding them good night he went out.

Herbert's boarding house was the nearest of the two, and there he stopped first. It was a neat looking house, in a very pleasant the door when Mr. Hudson rang.

"Does a young man named Herbert Bond board here?'

"He does. Walk in, sir, and I will him,' ' replied the woman.

"I will go to his room, if you will show ning was decidedly marred by this unexpecme where it is," answered Mr. Hudson, "I presume he is in it."

"I think so; he is seldom out in the evening. You can step up there if you like; go up two flights, and the first room on the right is the one," replied Mrs. Buntin.

Mr. Hudson puffed up the stairs, and knocked with his cane at the designated door. It was opened by Herbert, who looked very much amazed when he saw his employer, and said:

Why, Mr. Hudson, is anything the matter at the store? Nothing out of way I hope?" No-nothing-nothing at all," said Mr. Hudson, walking in, and taking a chair. "I took a notion to call around and see how you were this evening. Bond expressed himself as being very glad to see his employer, and relieved him of his hat and cane. Mr. Hudson glanced about the chamber. It was an attic room, with two dormer windows; a good fire was burning in an open grate ; a book-rack, filled with books, adorned one side of the room, while the centre of the floor was occupied cold? tions. As they walked much faster than he did, they were soon out of sight. The boarding-house was reached, the bell rung, and Mr. Hudson was admitted. The servant said that Mr. Seymore was in, and ushered him to his chamber door. Mr. Hudson knocked and the door was immediately flung wide open, and a voice exclaim-

"Well old fellow, got along at last have you? Were' all ready for you; have you got the _____ '' Charles Seymore stopped here, and his face turned deadly pale at see--" Charles Seymore stopped ing instead of one of his boon companions. his venerable employer. It was several secbeg your pardon, Mr. Hudson; you must excuse me; I expected a triend this evening, and in the dim light of the entry, I thought you were he.

Mr. Hudson entered the room and was cal three young men who had iosulted him in the street; they were smoking cigars, and had their feet elevated on the bureau, mantle-piece and bedstead. Mr. Hudson saw at once that he was a very unwelcome guest. The room was in confusion, and Seymore's actions were painfully awkward. Nevertheless his employer started a conversation, and had been there about ten minutes, when a footstep was heard on the stairs; and then the door opened a little way, and a bottle of champagne came rolling across the floor.followed immediately by around Dutch cheese. a bunch of segars, and two more bottles. Seymore looked dreadfully distressed, but could do nothing. It was a fourth friend street. Mrs. Buntin, the landlady, opened | who had been out for refreshments, and took this facetious mode of introducing them into the chamber. Mr. Hudson thought it time to go; so he took his leave, and returned home. It is almost needless to say that Charles Seymore's enjoyment of the eve-> ted visit. He and his triends had arranged for a jolly good time. Mr. Hudson was not long in making up his mind as to which one of his clerks would make the most faithful and efficient partner; and in less than a week it was announced in the papers that Herbert Bond was a member of the firm of "Benjamin Hudson & Co. It was a happy day for Herbert for he could live at home again amid the scenes of his childhood : and it was not many years before he managed the whole of the business himself, and became a wealthy man.

Charles Seymore knew very well the reason of Mr. Hudson's choice, and he never ceased to regret having formed such unprofitable acquaintances as were assembled in that room on that unlacky evening.
