THE OLD BURYING-GROUND.

Our vales are sweet with fern and rose.

Our hills are maple crowned; But not from them our fathers choose, The village burying-ground. The dearest spot in all the land. To Death they set apart; With scanty grace from Nature's hand;

And none from that of Art. A winding wall of mossy stone, Frost-flung and broken line, A lonesome acre thinly grown.

With grass and wandering vines. Without the wall a birch tree shows Its drooping and tasselled head: Within a stag-horn sumach grows

Fern-leafed with spikes of red :

There, sheep that graze the neghboring plain Like white ghosts come and go. The farm-horse draws his fettock chain. The cow-bell tinkles slow.

Low moans the river from its bed, The distant pines reply; Like mourners shrinking from the dead. They stand opart and sigh.

Unshaded smites the summer sun. Unchecked the winter blast; The school-girl learns the place to shun, With glances backward east.

For thus our fathers testified -That he might read who ran-The emptiness of human pride, The nothingness of man.

The hard and thorny path they kept; From beauty turned aside; Nor missed they ever those who slept The grace to life denied.

Yet still the wilding flowers would blow, The golden leaves would fall, The seasons come, the seasons go, And God be good to all.

Above the graves the blackberry hung In bloom and green its wreath, And harebells swung as if they rung, The chimes of pence beneath.

The beauty Nature loves to share, The gift she hath for all, The common light, the common air, O'er crept the grave-yard's wall.

I knew the glow of eventide, The sunrise and the noon, And glorified and sacrificed It slept beneath the moon.

tered over the farm until they are irreparable. By repairing broken implements at the proper time many dollars may be saved a proof of the assertion that "time is money." Attending the auction sales, and purchas, ing all kinds of trumpery because, in the words of the vender, the articles are "very cheap.

Allowing fences to remain unrepaired until strange eattle are found grazing in the meadow, grain-field, or bruising the fruit trees.

crops before making a single experiment. Planting fruit trees with the expectation of having fruit, without giving the trees Practicing economy by depriving stock of proper shelter during winter, and giving them unsound food, such as half rotten and mouldy hay and fodder. Keeping an innumerable tribe of rats on the premises, and two or three lazy dogs that eat up more in a month than they are worth in a whole litetime.

And lastly, he loses by not reading the advertisements of those who patronize the printer, they being invariably the most enterprising and liberal houses to deal with, when he goes to town. _

Hay Making.

Almost any person would think so simple a process was easily understood. It requires only a visit to the first hay field to see that few know what they are about. The object to be accomplished is to get the grass to dry as rapidly as possible. It is therefore an evil to turn it while there is any dew on the ground, or any moisture in the atmosphere. But there are sometimes other things to be kept in view. If the ground be damp, if the air is so dry that the cut grass may evaporate its moisture faster than the earth parts with it, it will pay to turn the hay. Again, in a wet time, the grass will sometimes lay a couple of days in the swath until it begins to turn yellow for want of light. It may, therefore, be a gain sometimes to turn it over, even though wet. If, however, there be danger of rain, it is better to let it lie in bulk, as rain washes out the sugary and gelatinous matters which give the value to hay, and leaves it like wellused tea leaves, from which it is hard to squeeze another drop fit to drink. Many are afraid to put away hay half-dried, for fear of heating in the barn; but grass which has dried rapidly, does not heat near as quick as hay which has once been wet and then dried thoroughly. Heating is a result of decomposition, and the matter washed out of hay in a rain-storm is required to prevent decay. How or what the hay-maker should do, will depend on circumstances. He must apply his knowledge as the occasions arise. He must keep in mind the objects he has to accomplish, which are to
