for the farmer.

When Wheat Should be Harvested. A great diversity of opinion exists as to the best time to cut wheat, the degree of ripeness at which it should be harvested.

Experiments made in England upon the same wheat, 1st, when the straw was green; 2d, when the straw was changing color, 3d, when fully ripe, gave the following results: 197 bushels per acre; 234 bushels per acre; 221 bushels per acre. These experiments show that the time of the second cutting is that which gives the largest yield, with the least loss to the farmer. The wheat thus harvested will also yield a larger quantity of fine flour and less bran than that cut earlier or later, and proves that the gluten is converted into starch if the wheat stands until fully ripe. The best time to cut wheat is when the straw is changing color at each end of the stalk, the sap having then ceased to flow. N And the advantage obtained by cutting thus early is that it prevents the shelling, which cannot be avoided if cut when fully ripe. Often during the process of cutting, as much as two and even four bushels are lost to an acre, because the wheat is dead ripe. This is no trifling loss, and might be made to pay all the expense of harvesting.

The indications of ripeness in wheat are few and simple. When the straw exhibits a bright yellow color, half-way or two-thirds of the way up the stem, and the ear begins to bend gently, the grain may be safely cut. But as a whole field does not ripen evenly or at the same .time, if one goes through the field and selects the greenest heads, and the grains separate from the chaff by rubbing through the palm of the hand, they are then out of the milky state and may be reaped with safety.

Wheat is most valuable to millers when it is cut partially green, for then the grain has the most flour and the least bran. For seed it should never be cut until fully ripe. The use of seed wheat that is cut before it is fully ripe is one great cause of smut in wheat. Smutty wheat itself is much improved, if not cut until fully ripe; and the use of brine and lime will kill smut to a great extent. - Chambersburg Repository.

MICE AND YOUNG TREES.-There has been a great deal said the last spring on the injury done to small apple-trees during last winter by mice, and the only remedy that we have yet seen suggested is to stamp the snow firmly around the trees. This is, however, not believed to be any remedy at all, and we doubt if it is of much advantage. for the last fifteen years, but we should say correspondents what they must do to save | highest market prices in exchange for goods. their trees, that it has received little atten-

Those who are in earnest for a remedy will try this and save their trees! but it will be too much trouble for others to devote a they will rather run the risk with mice .-Germantown Telegraph.

MOWING WEEDS .- The best thing to do with a seeded down barley-stubble infested with weeds, says a correspondent of an agricultural paper, is to run the mowing machine over it, and shave off the stubble, weeds, etc., close to the ground. I adopted this plan last fall on my wheat stubble, on some sandy knolls that were full of thistles. It has checked them sufficiently to enable the clover to get the start of them this seasa means of destroying weeds as fully as it

AN ANT TRAP. -As the season is now at hand for the pests, the ants, housewives and other who are troubled with them may probably use the following trap to advantage: Procure a large sponge, wash it well, press it dry, which will leave the cells quite open; then sprinkle over it some fine white sugar, and place it where the ants are troublesome They will soon collect upon the sponge and take up their abodes in the cells. It is only necessary to dip the sponge in scalding hot water which will wash them out dead. Put on more sugar and set the trap for a new haul; this process will clear the house of every ant.

WEEVIL -An old farmer communicates to the Nashville papers what he has found to be a sure preventive of weevil in wheat. He says: "In piling up your wheat after it has been cleaned with a fan, to every three bushels put in a good hard brick, dried by the sun, and be sure it is perfectly dry at hard and flinty that the insect or fly can House, of not penetrate the outer covering.

GLYCERINE. - A bottle of this should be kept in every family. It is a clear colorless syrup, sweet, and forms the main principal of fats. It has no smell if pure; hence it is not disagreeable. For chapped hands it is excellent, preventing the air from reaching the skin and thus keep it moist. It is the best hair oil in the world, as it never takes on taint. It keeps the hair moist as it has the merit of not being dried by the air, but draws moisture from the atmosphere. It is also the principal medicine for ear complaints, especially a dry ear. Pour a few drops into hair oil in the world, as it never takes on

SOAP FOR WHITENING THE HANDS .-Take a wine glassful of eau-de-cologne, and another of lemon juice; then scrape two cakes of brown Windsor soap to a powder, and mix well. When hard it will be an excellent soap for whitening the hands.
