The Kentucky Election.

The Demo. racy have been making a great blow over a pretended gain in Kentucky at the way the "tide," is "drifting all over the the late election in that State. A retrospect for the last eight years will, however, reveal the fact that there is nothing to discourage the Republicans, in the recent result in Kentucky.

In 1860, at the Presidential election in that State, over 144,000 votes were polled for the anti-Republican candidates. Abraham Lincoln received 1.364 votes. At no sime since then, until this year (with, the mass of voters at home) have strictly party out for Grant and Colfax. candidates been placed in the field; so that State could never be arrived at until the

the Democratic candidate for Governor on dlesex County, and formerly a member of the New York platform, received 115,524 votes. The Republican candidate, Mr. Baker, ran on the Chicago platform as the supporter of Grant and Colfax, and received 26,275 votes. By comparing the aggregate vote of 1860, it will be seen that the numbers are nearly the same. But there has been a decrease of over 25,000 in the rebel vote, while on the other hand the Union vote has been increased nearly 25,000, or an average gain of over 3,000 votes yearly since the election of Abraham Lincoln in 1860. At this rate of conversion, if any not the Democratic, whose forces are stead- fax ily being weakened in the strongest State they can boast of. If our gain is in the same ratio in every State of the Union, Grant and Colfax will carry the Union by a larger majority in November than any Presidential ticket has ever before received. | balf.
