Educational Column.

W. H. PRIDEAUX, EDITOR.

Teachers and Scholars. No one need think to enter the field as a teacher, unless he is willing to yield himself F RANKLIN HOUSE, up to his labor, for it is a labor, though a pleasant one, when undertaken in the right spirit, but it should not be a task. Not only should we, as instructors, be prepared to furnish the necessary information, but we should study how to impart it to the best advantage; how to make it available, how to sift out the knowledge, as it were, so as to make dry studies interesting. In fact There should be no such thing as dry study. there is a great deal of useless matter dragged into school books, and the pupil is foreed to repeat the ideas, and often the exact words of the author, without getting the least glimmer of their light; they leave the class, nay, the school, destitute of the faintest idea of what they have been studying. When the book is not clear, where pages are devoted to what may be condensed into half the space, the book should be set aside, and the teacher should give oral instruction. I have seen pupils who have been studying arithmetic up to the age of 16 and 17 years and yet they were not able to perform the simplest arithmetical calculation. You may say, "Oh! this is a solitary instance. He must have been very stupid." I tell you no. It is the case with a great portion of the pupils who attend what are termed our best eity schools. Our public schools are no ex-

I have found many, even there, who have not been taught the best methods of reason ing. Now what is the reason of this? If a child be passably intelligent she should be able to give up the study of arithmetic at 14 years of age. It should not be necessary for her to dwell in writing and grammar from 10 to 17 years of age-7 years, and as many more for arithmetic. Yet it is almost without an exception. Where does the fault lie? I do not say altogether on the teacher. for, of course, if a parent keep her child at home a day or two every week, progress can not be expected, they should then be obliged by the rules of the school to take a lower position in his classes; and thus he would likely learn something thoroughly, and not obtain a useless smattering without end or aim. If all teachers were conscientious and true to their calling, the parents could no decide the matter, and the pupil would be educated in spite of difficulties. I would have the teacher do less for the schollar than he now does. Set the child to thinking; show her the way; then let her move on and learn to overcome difficulties. The child should be encouraged to ask questions. I know that many will disagree with me, and say that it is impossible to make any progress with a class if one stops to answer all the questions which children may put. Many will tell you they will make idle and foolish inquiries. I tell you no. If properly trained they will ask only such questions will awaken interest and show thinking minds. I have always encouraged the hab it. The teacher should strive to prepare himself on all subjects, and if he be not 'enreful, he will find his pupils will steal a march on hin, and make some demands which will at first seem difficult to answer. I would here notice the sad failing that I have observed in my tellow workers, which is this, that they think that the pupil must be answered at all hazards, as it would never do for the teacher to be found wanting, so they give a wrong answer, a mere form of words or a set speech and let it pass. We ought to have more courage and say frankly, "I do not know; I'll try and find out." Every child should be taught to search the truth for himself, for the reasons which have given rise to a certain rule. Especially, when authors differ, the subject should be presented in a new light by the teacher; then let the pupil take that method which seems most reasonable. A teacher should take the subject in hand and spend even weeks in gathering all the information she can upon it by inquiry, by observation, and by study. This close application and research upon one subject will make a new one nach easier. The English grammar should, in my opinion, be well understood; then the scholar will be fitted to study the grammars of other languages with more facility. Every teacher should possess a magnetic influence over his pupils; he should imbue the class with life and spirit, and should bear them along with that subtle influence, which can be seen and felt rather than described. He should aim to create an enthusiasm, so that her class may feel lifted up, and the time spent together seem all too short. School days certainly should be happy. A teacher who is one in the true sense, will not fail to make them so. That course or study should be pursued with pupils which will be most conducive to their best interests and future welfare; that they may be able, as men and women, to make their knowledge availble in the cause of humanity; that they may be useful wherever they may be placed. Self reliance should be cultivated. There is a great deficiency in this respect and there is no better place than the school, even for the cultivation of this important quality: Now, if my remarks prove useful to those just commenc ing the education of the young, I shall be glad. The great secret is-how to teach.-Phrenological Jour nal.

Fellow teachers, owing to many cares our educational column has been neglected. It is now started. Keep it up. Send in your pieces. The above we found in the Phrenological Journal and thought it would do good.

A Canadian paper relates that the mayor of Brantford, while reading a written motion by one of the counsellors, broke out into a loud laugh at seeing canal spelt kannell The counsellor was indignant. The mayor explained that it should be spelled canaud. Other members objected to this, and a general discussion ensued, which finally ended by a compromise being agreed on. By unanimous vote, it was agreed that kennell rently unknown by either Vebster or Wor-
