Thinning out Grapes.

Is the importance of thinning out the fruit of the vine, duly considered by the majority of cultivators? I think not. From close observation, and even sad experience, the subject in my opinion, calls for much more attention than is usually given. In young vines, this is more particularly the | Cor. Fourth and Pine Streets,

Such vigorous and hardy constituted varieties as the Concord may stand it to a considerable extent, but even they will eventually suffer. This fault is not only to be found in the vinyards of the novice, but can be seen almost everywhere, in charge of those who know better. This, then, being admitted, the next question is, how shall it be remedied? Shall we prune so much shorter so as not to have more wood than the vine can carry safely through, or have more wood and then thin out the bunches?

The latter in my opinion, will be the best, for by the first plan we get our fruit too much crowed, and throw too much force into the young canes for the following year's bearing. My impression is that when a vine is pruned to what would seem about right, the pinching out of every third bunch, at the first operation, pinching back would be the proper method. I would leave but two bunches on each bearing shoot, and in some instances it is better to leave but one.

We all know that the forming of the seed of any fruit is the heaviest tax on the plant. This being the case, do we not give considerable relief when we diminish the tax onethird? I think we would be safe in counting on having the same weight of fruit on two bunches as if three were left. Some years ago we grew Concord bunches in this way, which the Committee, who were to test them, would not admit them to be of that variety until they tasted them. For marketing table grapes, this is particularly practicable. For instance, let one man take Concords that will average three fourths of a pound to the bunch, and another have them as usually grown, and my word for it, the large bunches will command nearly double price, not only among the wealthy, but the masses. - Grape Culturist.

Training Tomato Vines.

A neighbor lady last year trained her to matoes up small poles-bean poles-over six feet high, reaching out above the poles. This case is a practical demonstration of the success that may attend this method of training. If I had not seen it with my own eyes I could hardly credit a truthful account of it. The poles were set before the plants were, and when the latter began to grow the leading shoot only was trained, all others being kept off through the season. As it increased in length, it was tied to the pole with a common wool twine from time to time-simply a vine like a morning glory or honeysuckle.

The fruit of course set first at the lower end of the vine, and as the season advanced higher up, until now there is fruit that bids fair to ripen at the top of the poles. There it hung in beautiful clusters, easy accessible with no obstruction whatever, and no fruit rotting under a swamp of vines where the sun could not touch it. This is all open to the light and heat of the sun, and to the wind. The plant, in short, has a fair chance given to develope itself, and it was ready and glad to avail itself of the privilege. If there is a worm on the vines, he cannot hide away, but can easily be found and destroyed and the ground can be worked and the weeds kept down through the whole season as easily as among corn. The grower is "master of the situation," and he feels it, and the pleasure and profit are thereby en

The plants may be set in rows four feet apart, and thirty inches apart in the row. They will bear to be set closer than this, but there will be less freedom of movement for the hoeing, tying, etc. Try it, reader; it is as cheap as the common trellis-yes, cheaper; it is easy, certain, will ripen fruit some earlier and give you more of it, of good quality, from the same areas, -in a word, will please you .- Journal of Agri-
