for the farmer.

The practice of placing corn stalks uncut before cattle, still prevails in many parts of the country. The blades are eaten off, the tender part of the tops perhaps, consumed, and the rest left on the ground to decay. We have long since advocated the cutting and steaming of corn stalks, and their admixture with small quantities of ground feed, to induce the cattle to consume them. With such treatment we succeeded in having them cleanly eaten up, but when the stalks are cut and not steamed, even when when supplied with a small quantity of moistened feed, great waste occurs. The largest pieces are left by the animals. More recently we have experimented in cutting these stalks much finer, and will be glad to have a machine cutting them as thin as wafers. We also think that those who have horse power for running their cutting boxes, will find it to their advantage to pass the corn stalk, before cutting, through a pair of plain rollers, so as to completely crush their silectious coating. The outside of the corn stalk loses its aramo and becomes distasteful to cattle, while its hard coating renders it difficult for them to masterit. A plain pair of turned iron rollers four inches in diameter and six inches long. and set with a spring of sufficient force to crush the corn stalk, would crush more than a ton in an hour with great ease; and we cannot but believe, that after such treatment, these stalks passed through a cutting box or chaffing machine, would furnish a fodder very acceptable to cattle, for it would then be soft, and free from the objections urged against corn stalks in their natural state.

The analysis of the corn stalk shows its value as food for cattle to be very considerable, and the immense crop now raised of staple, warrants every experiment for the economical use of the stalks, to be carefully made. We shall try this system, and hope to induce others to make similar experi-

Plan of a Jorn Crib.

I built a corn crib a few years ago, which I think, for convenience, has but few equals. It has never failed to keep corn perfectly, and is likewise rat proof. It can easily be filled without the ordinary way of making doors in the roof, which are so difficult to make tight. The dimensions are as follows: Length, 30 feet; width, 4 feet at sills and 5 feet at plates, with a projection in the mid dle six feet long across the crib. The main posts are 8 feet from top of sills to top of plates. The posts to the projection are six feet and two inches. The sills are four by six, and should be of some durable wood, as they are exposed more to the weather than the rest of the frame. It stands upon seventeen posts, set in the ground two and a half feet, resting on flat stones, and twenty inches above ground, fixed in the usual way with tin milk pans inverted over them, which should have the wire rims cut off, as rats sometimes catch by these and asseend. The plates are three by seven inches; posts four by six inches. The size of the timber is immaterial; some would not think minlarge enough, but it answers all purposes, The roof is of twenty inch cypress shingles, and extends a foot over the eaves. The sides are of pine lath, two inches wide, put on up and down, just wide enough to keep the smallest ears. The middle part is covered with pine boards, with a door in one side. In filling the crib, loose boards are used to keep the corn in each end, leaving the middle space for shelling the corn and storing the cobs, which I consider worth sa-

HARVESTING BUCKWHEAT.-Buckwheat is the most peculiar or the grain family in the manner of its ripening-a considerable portion being in the milk state when another will be fully matured. The point is to cut it in that stage which will save the most and this is when about half of the grain has turned brown. If the straw were less sensitive to cold than it is, harvesting might be delayed longer, but when stricken by frost the growth is entirely arrested and the straw disposed to an early decay, preventing any further maturing of the grain. But, cut when a portion is in the milk and set up in bunches in the field, the juice of the straw, in which it is peculiarly rich, will cause the immature portions to ripen and little will be lost by over ripeness or lack of it. The common grain cradle will be found the best implement for harvesting this grain, and it leaves the straw in a condition to be easily gathered in bunches for setting up for dry-

A very convenient arrangement for hold ing bags while filling them may be easily made as follows: Take a piece of plank about twenty inches long and about a foot wide, bevel off the sides a little, and nail strips of thin board, that will spring, six or eight inches wide, to it for uprights. The plank base should be beveling enough to Everybody should buy their goods at Salesmen are polite, attentive and obliging make the uprights about fifteen inches apart at the upper ends. The bag is placed between the upper end folded over the uprights. It will be held firm in a convenient position for filling. The uprights should be just long enough so that the bag will rest
