

For the Farmer.

Damp Cellar Walls.

Tarring cellar walls to protect the contents from damp has long been practiced in Cornwall England. In that wet-favored portion of Great Britain, where a fine day is the exception, and not as here the rule, every precaution is requisite to protect walls from dampness, and amongst these none are found more effectual than the use of coal-tar, after being carefully prepared. The preparation consists simply in boiling the tar in any convenient kettle, until all the watery parts are evaporated and driven off by the heat. The tar is then laid on the walls with a common whitewash brush, one or more thin coats being used, and as the tar is always laid on in as hot a state as possible, without destroying the hairs of the brush, it can be spread on a rough surface of stone work with an even, thin coat, and the stone or bricks for ever after become impervious to moisture.

I have often seen buildings so covered that were first plastered with a smooth coat of mortar, and laid out into squares to imitate cut stone work, and on this coat tar takes remarkably well. It would not perhaps, be advisable to use tar for outside protection against the weather, where the black color would be a serious objection and unsightly object, but for utility there is no substance so cheap and at the same time so efficient in its action as a protection to walls against dampness. One great cause of wet walls is variation in temperature. If the wall so exposed to cold on the outside and a warm moist atmosphere within, a damp surface on the inside is absolutely certain to be the result. This arises from the condensation of the humid internal air on the chilled walls, and the remedy in this case must be looked for in another way.

To exemplify this principle, let any one convince himself by laying a saw or ax out of doors, into a cold atmosphere, when the thermometer is about zero. After ten minutes of such exposure, bring the article into warm moist air of the house, and ax or saw will be at once covered with dew, from the condensation of moisture from the internal air on the cold surface. And this principle is always more or less active in cellars. The remedy is to keep the temperature upon the outside as much as conveniently may be, by covering and partial protection, and down in the inside by absence of heat, and your cellar walls will at once dry up. Attention must also primarily be paid to the matter of drainage.—Toronto Globe.

Farmers Should have Fruit.

This is the season to think of planting fruit trees. Every farmer who has not a good orchard of apple, peach, pear, cherry, plum, and quince trees, should lose no time in planting one. Now is the time to act in the premises. The "sinews of war"—the money—should be raised to buy the trees this very spring to plant. One year in a man's lifetime is a good deal—and it should not be lost. It is a great deprivation to lose any single fruit, even for a single year. If the money is not on hand, it should be borrowed—if it can be—for it will certainly pay to borrow money to plant trees. They greatly increase the value of a farm. They beautify and adorn home. They supply the best luxuries of the table. They give health to the body. They supply food cheaper than it can be raised by growing cereals—for when once in bearing, they continue to bear during a man's natural life.

But not only should fruit trees of all kinds be planted, but every family should have plenty of strawberries, gooseberries, raspberries, currants, blackberries, grapes, etc. Now is the time to procure them. Order early, so that you may be sure to get them. There will be a very great demand the present spring, as thousands of immigrants have poured into Missouri and Kansas the past year, and all sought to plant trees—and the majority will plant them. From all we can learn, the demand is greater for trees and plants the present spring than it has ever been before in the West. We are glad to learn this, because it is an evidence that the people know their interests, and we are taking early action to secure them.—Rural World.

THE HORSE.—Youatt, in his book entitled, "The Horse," says this animal will never drink hard water if soft is within reach; that he will leave clear, transparent hard water for a pool of soft, even though the latter be discolored with mud. Very cold water from the well will make the hair rise up, and not infrequently cause an attack of gripes. Give soft water if practicable, especially if the animal be ailing. This is a valuable hint.

WEEVIL.—Salt is said to be a complete preventive against the destruction of wheat by weevil. Mix a pint of salt with a barrel of wheat, or put the grain in old salt barrels and the weevil will not attack it. In stacking wheat, four or five quarts of salt to every hundred sheaves, sprinkled among them, will entirely secure them from the depredations of this insect, and render the straw more valuable as food for cattle.

HORACE GREELEY has written a very sensible article upon the disasters which follow the destruction of forests. He entreats farmers and land owners to plant and rear at least two better trees for every one they may be impelled to cut down. There can be no doubt that the destruction of trees impairs the health, impairs the pockets, and impairs the beauty of the lands of the people.

MANY English farmers feed no hay to their work horses, but keep them in bich order with straw, roots and shorts. The equivalent of twelve tons of hay can be produced on one acre in roots. Farmers in this country will eventually bring vegetables more into use as stock feed, for roots are cheap healthy and nutritious.

The farmer, in the manufacture and care of his manure heap, should always keep in view that it in preparation should not be allowed to lose its strength by the rapid fermentation having its soluble parts unnecessarily washed away and lost.
