for the farmer.

Keeping Grapes Under Ground. A correspondent of the Grape Culturist says: Many years ago, while in the nursery business, a customer wanted some vines of me, and while they were being dug up he asked me if I kept any grapes over winter. This was in March. Of course he got a negative reply. "Well," said he. "when I come next week for trees I will bring you some along." The thing seemed but a joke to me at the time, but of course I thanked him for the kind offer. True to his promise when he came a week or ten days thereafter, he brought me some. Not a few berries, as might have been expected, but at least five pounds. The, were Isabellas and Catawbas, perfectly plump, sweet and fresh although most of the berries had dropped from their stems. With the exception of a very slight earthy taste, they were certainly excellent. The question, of course, was asked, how do you keep them thus? The reply was, that in the fall, as late as the cold would admit, they were gathered in a clear day when perfeetly dry; a box about eight inches deep was taken; a layer of green leaves was taken from the vines and laid on the bottom; on these a layer of grapes, then a layer of leaves again, until the box was full, finishing with a layer of leaves. Put the lid on tight, and bury deep enough to escape the frosts of winter. Of course it must be where water cannot settle into the box. The stems of those grapes were quite fresh when given to me. The man told me his father in law had kept them thus for years.

To this, the editor of that journal adds We have often dug up branches of grapes on layers, late in the fall, when all the grapes on the vines had been frozen long ago, and found them plump, sweet and fresh. We do not doubt the method is a good one, and worth a trial.

To GET SURPLUS HONEY IN COMMON HIVES.-Farmers who keep bees in the common hives may obtain twice as much surplus honey as they usually do if they put on more boxes for it. The entire top of the hive should be covered with them, and the passage ways to them are made much larger than they usually are -two two inch auger holes to each box -the boxes large enough to hold ten pounds. The space honey boxes if made of thin toards should be covered with another box made of inch boards, both of which should fit to the top of the hive. There should be glass ends or sides to the small boxes by which their condition an be examined, and when they or any of them are finished, filled and the honey capped over, it should be removed, and its place supplied with an empty one. As soon as the first hard frost in the fall occurs, remove them all, whether filled or not, as the bees will at once carry all that is not capped over, down into the body of the hive. It is not wanted there, as any swarm that has honey in the small boxes will have enough to winter on. Swarms will carry honey into surplus boxes for the want of room below and not before.
