for the farmer.

Co-operative Butter Making. We have investigated and watched the a great deal of interest and in every instance, so far as we know it has proven eminently successful. There are, however, sundry difficulties to be overcome in some districts. As yet no really practicable method of determining the relative value of milk has been hit upon, and in nearly every community there are more or less careless feeders. Both quality and quantity of butter are affected by this circumstance, much more sensibly than in the case with cheese. The profitable disposal of the skimmed milk is a matter of serious import. Near large cities having a large foreign population, a considerable sale of skimmed milk may, by proper effort, be established; but as yet the greater proportion of it has been worked up into skimmed cheese, for which there is but a limited d mand; indeed the present supply is be lieved to be quite sufficient to meet the dethand at profitable rates.

The butter factory at Elgin, Illinois, made sales of unpressed curds last season to parties in Chicago, who were experimenting upon their use in the arts, but with what special application, or to what extent successful, we are not informed. All things considered, there seems but one course to DISTON, CROSS CUT, be pursued with the article, and that is to carry it back to the farm, and feed it out to calves or pigs. And to the farmer who is not wedded to the absurd theory that he may carry off his crop indefinitely without making any restitution, this ought not to afford any discouragement, for we know from actual experiment that veal or young beef or pork may be profitably made from skimmed milk and grain, while a very considerable amount of manure may be produced for an increased production of butter, veal, and pork next year, a result even more desirable ultimately than any mere increase of eash income.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Bee Journal gives the following new way to swarm bees: "I had three decamping swarms that left my apiary. I had hived the first in the forenoon, on the day it swarmed; but at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon it decamp ed for parts unknown. It got off some distance before I got the looking-glass, but, to my surprise, the third flash of the sun's rays with the looking glass made the bees fly round and round, instead of straight forward as before, and they immediately set- I store of tled upon a tree. The second swarm came off in the atternoon. It made no halt to settle, but started direct for the timber. I followed it, and brought it down in the same way. The third got nearly half a mile away, flying on the east side of the timber. The sun being in the west, we could not use the HORSE-SHOES, and horse-nails, to be had at glass; but as soon as we got the sun, three or four flashes settled it also. I have the swarms thus arrested, and they have all
