Books, Jobs and Blanks

Of every description, printed in the very best style and on the shortest notice, at the COUNTRY DOLLAR Office

There came at length to the plans and projects of this pair, a third party, quite as formidable as either of the two, and gifted with an audacity of mind and bearing that was equal to Drury's daring, and to Ashley's perseverance. This man was James Bennett, the proprietor of a fine

NEW YORK, December 6th.

Respected Sir—A few days ago I wrote to his Honor, the Mayor, informing him about the attempt to murder Mr. Foster, and as my letter to him may not have come to hand and my conscience will not let me rest until I have done all in my power to save the life of a fellow creature, I take the liberty of writing to you about it. I dare not give you my name, but if trouble comes to my poor husband who has been very unfortunate, I will make myself known and hope you will intercede with Mr. Woodhull to save him. My husband has become very poor, having failed in business and been for a long time sick and so was tempted into crime, but he is not

Up to this discovery the plan of the conspirators had gone on swimmingly. They had got every thing fixed to entrap Mr. Foster, and an opportunity only was wanting to strike the blow. What made Mr. Foster still more confident that they intended to take his life, was the fact that of late, a suspicious-looking man, of large size, had been seen hanging about the rear gate of the premises which leads into Great Jones street, and that on two occasions a gentleman, who resides in his
