INSCRIBED TO HON. G. W. WOODWARD. Tis sad to weep and wake, Beside the severing tic; To woo in vain the shadows back, That dim the loving eye. But sudder far to see the blight Of undeparted bloom; That left no track from day to night, From spring-time to the tomb.

Thus to this gentle trio came The angel of the grave; Quenched with a look the vital flame, And chilled the purple wave; And drinking quick the precious breath, He left his task abroad, To bear th' unfading wreath of Death, And precious gems to God.

This is the balm of bleeding love, In life's dear purpose cross'd, The shrouded here, are winged above, The loved, but not the lost ! The smile of Heaven, had early won, Each heart from earth away; And death was but the sudden dawn Of everlasting day.

Thou, Ellen, in thy childhood bright The way but little trod, Had'st turned from earth's delusive light, To yield thy heart to God. An opening flower, that caught the hue Of Heaven's refulgent dyes, And dripping with the morning dew, Was gathered to the skies.

"Twere sweet to have thee bloom in time; But sweeter far to thee. To pour thy fragrance in the clime, Of immortality. Where blossoms close not for the night,

Nor dread the storm to come, The noon-day heat, and evening blight, Are far beneath thy home.

This tale o'er many a soul will hang, In shadows for a day; But there are hearts from which the pang Will pass no more away-Hearts, that in after years will beat,

Ev'n as to-night in pain, And hear in dreams the coming fect, That ne'er shall come again.

God help the mother in her grief, The father in his wol The Hand alone can give relief, That measured out the blow. Thy blessing on each lonely hearth; And grant the spirits riven,
