

THE "GAULPIN CLAIM."

Mr. Secretary Crawford is likely to get himself in trouble. It appears, from the evidence before us, and which unless it be satisfactorily explained, will place the Secretary of War in no very enviable position, that by some species of nocus nocus, a claim of $49,000 has been exaggerated into $180,000, and that the latter sum has been paid into Mr. Crawford's hands, as agent for the claimants. We will let the New York Tribune tell the story, and as it is good Wmro authority, of course, our whig friends will give ear to it.—West Chester Republican.

1. That this is a very old claim, (none the worse for that,) growing out of certain transactions to which one Gaulpin, certain Indians, and the Royal Government of Georgia were parties, in, or near 1773, before the breaking out of the Revolutionary war.

2. That the State of Georgia never recognized nor provided for the claim, (which was originally for lands,) but having disposed of most of her wild lands to the federal Government, turned the claim over to that government for satisfaction.

3. That this claim so venerable and well packed, never was admitted by our Government till 1840, or thereabouts, when a bill was got through both Houses directing the Treasury Department to audit and settle it on terms of justice and equity.

4. That it was so audited and settled under Secretary Walker, and the full estimated amount of the original claim paid over to the heirs and assigns of the original claimant, the sum being about $49,000.

5. That this sum was duly pocketed, but the claim still prosecuted, (or afterwards revived) for interest on the amount so accorded, for the seventy-six years intervening since the origin of the demand.

6. That ex-Governor George W. Crawford, of Georgia, now U. S. Secretary of War, was formerly the agent for the claimants in prosecuting their claim, though he no longer appears as such on record.

7. That Mr. Meredith, Secretary of the Treasury, directed the proper officer of his Department to re-examine this claim for interest, and that officer (Controller Whitley) did so, and reported that there was nothing due the claimant, according to the principles established by the Government for the settlement of claims.

8. That Mr. Meredith permitted or directed an appeal to be taken from this decision to the Attorney General, (Reverdy Johnson) who reported in favor of the validity and equity of the claim; whereupon,

9. Secretary Meredith directed its payment, and it has been paid to the amount of some $180,000.

As a further evidence of the manner in which the public Treasury has been plundered by the Taylor cabinet, in this Gaulpin claim, and another of somewhat less amount, we give the following extract from a recent letter of the Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Daily News, one of the most thoroughgoing Whig papers in the State:

The truth of the matter is, most of our whig friends here are loud in their denunciations of Mr. Meredith's conduct in passing the claim after having been rejected by Mr. Whitley, the First Comptroller of the Treasury. It has never been the practice of our government to pay interest on claims, and it is universally believed there were no good reasons in this instance for a departure from that custom.

This now much talked of claim was bandied about in the Georgia Legislature from 1780 down to 1840, without ever having its equity or justice acknowledged by that Legislature. Its journals show that the commissioners to whom the claims of the Indian traders had been referred for adjudication, had decided against this very Gaulpin claim by a vote of 109 to 31.

Mr. Crawford, it seems, then, after having entirely failed in the Georgia Legislature, directed his attention to Congress, and finally succeeded in getting a bill passed at the close of the session in 1840, whereupon R. J. Walker, the then Secretary of the Treasury, paid the principal, amounting to some forty thousand dollars, but wholly refused to pay the interest, which amounted to about one hundred & ninety thousand dollars.

It is said that the reason of Mr. Cost Johnson appearing voluntarily before the public, in defence of this claim, is, that he also had a claim allowed by Mr. Clayton the Secretary of State, which bears a worse aspect than even the Gaulpin case. The facts as given to me are as follows: During the administration of Mr. Polk, Mr. Buchanan investigated the claim of Joseph De Lafranca, for alleged munitions of war furnished at Mobile and Baton Rouge, in 1810, and he came to the conclusion, upon the testimony of Col. Russell, formerly of the army, that that claim was a fraudulent one; but nevertheless adjudged it over to the care of Mr. Clayton, his successor in the State Department.—Thomas J. Johnson was the agent of the claim, but being much out of health, Wm. Cost Johnson and James E. Harvey, the correspondent of the North American, came forward to press the claim, and after bringing the weight of their energy and influence to bear, succeeded in obtaining the desired legal opinion of Mr. Attorney General.

Erption of Mount Vesuvius.

We find in the Courier des Etats-Unis the following further particulars of the late eruption, from which paper we translate: Eruption of Vesuvius.—The officer of the American navy who lost his life in the late war of Curvesville was Charles Carroll Bayard, whose grade was that of a passed midshipman. He was the son of the Hon. R. H. Bayard, ex-Senator in Congress, of the State of Delaware. This young man belonged to the Mediterranean squadron; and the ship to which he was attached having arrived at Naples, he obtained permission to go and visit Vesuvius. He was near the edge of the crater when he was struck in the right arm with a stone thrown out by the volcano. This wound being very serious, he was at once conveyed to Naples; but, notwithstanding the care bestowed upon him, it was impossible to stop the hemorrhage which took place. Chloroform was administered to him, in order that his arm might be amputated. The operation appeared to have succeeded, and there was some hope that he might be saved; but, on the next day, lockjaw manifested itself, and the young man died on the morning of the 10th of February.

Two or three other persons have been also the victims of their curiosity. There was an extreme anxiety at Naples, moreover, to go and see close at hand the magnificent spectacle which the mountain of Vesuvius presented. We find the following in a private correspondence:—

NAPLES, February 9—11 p. m.—Vesuvius is all on fire. What an illumination! What frightful detonations, such as might have proceeded from the cannonading of Eylau! And the sky and the sea appeared to roll in flame. The fury of the volcanic monster made itself known this time by terrific warnings. It belched forth incessantly from its ugly jaws a shower of granite and fire, which mounded down the sides of the mountain pouring its burning waves in the direction of Ottajano.—Wo to all which is found in its path. All or nearly all the foreigners who were at Naples left at six o'clock in a special train which the railroad manager put at their disposition. A great many ladies were of the number who went.

Half-past eleven.—The sharpness of the reports has doubled; an immense column of flame rises to the sky; Vesuvius has just formed a new crater for itself, a new issue; it presents at this time the most magnificent and most imposing phenomenon which could be offered to the admiration of man.

Midnight.—One of my friends, a Swiss officer in the service of the King of Naples, has just sought me in his carriage to conduct me to the theatre of this sublime spectacle. I depart with a view of giving you more ample details on my return.

February 10—10 a. m.—I abandon the idea of depicting to you the terrible yet magnificent spectacle of the night. It would require the golden pen of the Arabian Nights, and even that would break in impotence in my hands. The splendors of this Vesuvian eruption exceed all that the human imagination could conceive of the fantastical. Unhappily the lava has made great ravages; it spreads over a large surface of ground, two leagues long and half a league broad, (at an elevation of four metres.) It has destroyed the magnificent villa of the Prince of Ottajano, a convent, a church, some cottages, and a number of vines.

The following calculation exhibits the increasing progression of the Vesuvian eruptions. From the year 79 to the year 1036 of the Christian era, five are reckoned; from 1036 to 1631, there were seven; from 1631 to 1794, seventeen; from 1794 to 1850, eight; of which three have threatened the safety of the cities situated at the foot of the volcanic mountain.
