

THE FARMER.

WORK FOR THE MONTH.

Potatoes.—As we are taught by the experience of the last four years, that the early planted potatoes have succeeded best, we advise our friends to get in their fall crop of Irish potatoes as early in their month after they have got in their corn crop as possible.

Manure.—The manure best adapted to these roots is that which has undergone the process of decomposition, and thereby been broken down in texture, as coarse manure is apt to produce forked, unsightly roots.

Soil and Preparation.—The best soil for the growth of roots, of all kinds, is a deep, fertile, loamy one. The ground should, after the application of the manure, be deeply and thoroughly ploughed; if possible, the subsoil plough should follow the share plough, in order that the roots may have a deep bed to pasture in.

Before we enter into any particular directions, we will remark that every one who cultivates roots in anywise upon a large scale, should, if he has not one already, purchase a Drilling Machine, as it will save its price in labor the first season, besides ensuring regularity in the distribution of the seed.

Mangel Wurzel.—Sugar Beet.—As the culture of each of these roots is the same, we will treat of them under the same head.

Preparation of the Seed.—Soak the seed in water for two days, then draw off the water, let the seed drain in a sieve, but not to dry; then mix them with twice their bulk of soil and ashes, or ashes and plaster, so as to separate and render the seed easy of being sown.

Quantity of seed per acre.—Three pounds of seed of either kind of beets is about the right quantity per acre.

Width of furrows or rows.—The most convenient distance at which to cultivate the Mangel Wurzel and sugar beet, is from 27 to 30 inches from row to row; and the plants when thinned out, should stand 12 inches asunder in the row.

Modes of Drilling.—We have done a pretty fair days' work in drilling in beet seed from the mouth of a quart bottle, half filled with sand, the other half seed; but as all operations guided by the hand, are more or less irregular, we prefer to use the drilling machine, by which a man may drill in two acres a day with comparative ease to himself. Drilling machines may be had at the cost of only a few dollars, which make the drill, drop and cover the seed, and roll the ground also at one and the same time. These machines are so adjusted that the operator can regulate the distance of depositing the seed. These are all considerations worthy of moment, as they save time, which is the equivalent of money.

Depth of Drill.—The drills, made for the reception of the seed, should be about one inch deep. This is easily regulated by the drilling machine, where the seed is thus put in. If a drilling machine is not used, a line must be stretched across the ground, north and south, when the operator marks off a furrow or drill with the edge or corner of a hoe, then proceeds to drop the seed from the mouth of a bottle, or by hand, therein, and covers with a rake, pressing the earth down over the seed, and with the back of his rake or desired depth of garden roller.

by the condition of the ground, run a one horse cultivator through the middle of the rows, and work near the plants with the hoe and hand. In two weeks more, repeat your working in the same way, and unless the weather should have proved very unpropitious, you may consider your labor upon your beet crop as done.

Use of the Leaves.—About the middle of August, just at that period when your pastures wither beneath the blighting influence of droughts, and the scorching rays of the sun, and when your milk cows begin to dry up their milk in consequence of the want of succulent food, you may go into your beet-patch and gather there as many leaves as will carry them through the residue of the month of August, and all September, without materially affecting the growth of the roots of either the manzel-wurzel or sugar-beet. In stripping the leaves from the beet, those on the crown or heart must be left untouched. In gathering the leaves, the party must press his thumb nail through the beet near its junction with the body of the root, being careful not to lacerate or tear the skin from the stem of the beet. In this way several tons of beet leaves, say from three to four, may be collected in the course of the season from an acre of beets, and I need scarcely add, that they are excellent food for milk cows, productive of the increase and secretion of milk, besides being highly relished by other kinds of stock. When the leaves are thus gathered from beets, fresh ones immediately put out, and are ready for being pulled every two weeks.

MEDICAL HOUSE, ESTABLISHED 15 YEARS AGO BY DR. KINKELIN, North-West corner of Third and Union streets, Between Spruce and Pine streets, PHILADELPHIA.

FIFTEEN YEARS of extensive and unintermitted practice spent in this city have rendered Dr. K. the most expert and successful practitioner far and near. In the treatment of all diseases of a private nature, Persons afflicted with sores upon the body, throat, or legs, pains in the head or bones, neuralgic rheumatism, eruptions, gravel, disease arising from youthful excess or impurities of the blood, whereby the constitution has become enfeebled, are all treated with success.

TAKE PARTICULAR NOTICE. Young men who have injured themselves by a certain practice indulged in—a habit frequently learned from evil companions or at school—the effects of which are nightly felt, even when asleep, and destroy both mind and body, should apply immediately. Weakness and constitutional debility, loss of muscular energy, physical lassitude and general prostration, irritability and all nervous affections, indigestion, sluggishness of the liver, and every disease in any way connected with the disorder of the procreative functions cured, and full vigor restored.
