

that it was the intention of France to establish a monarchy in Mexico.

Paredes has left Aguascalientes with his friend Jarauta for Zacatecos, where it is said he is to meet Ampudia, who, tired of cutting so small a figure in the world, is determined to revolt. His cowardice and cruelty in times past, few will ever forget; and he is loathed so much, even by his own people, that he would attach himself to any cause just now. But the sudden termination of the new-sprung revolution in San Luis, the movements and operations of these men do not trouble the public mind.

The health of the whole army is now good, comparatively speaking, and the idea of getting home or into active operations, has roused them from that state into which a life of inactivity for 8 months had thrown them.

The Legislature of the State of Chihuahua, has sent a protest to Congress against the ceding of any portion of territory now occupied by Mexicans.

The pamphlet of Rejon against peace was referred to a committee, who ordered it to be placed amongst the archives. Sr. Rio put in an "exposition" also against peace. He said that the present treaty should be thrown aside, and that none other should be entered into, until the Republic should be in a situation to treat with honor to itself. He wants a President elected who can manage the vast resources of the country, and place it in that position for which nature intended it.

The Treaty & Annexation.

The secret articles of the treaty, we understand, provide that the United States shall maintain an adequate military force in Mexico until her Government shall be reorganized, or for some definite period. The object of this provision, which was strongly urged by the Mexican Commissioners, was to enable the Mexican Government to put down all revolutions and insurrections, and give full effect to its reorganization. It was certainly a timely and judicious proviso; for nothing can be clearer than that the withdrawal of our troops from Mexico will be the signal for a general insurrection of the aboriginal and colored population. But, after all, such a provision merely postpones an inevitable event. The delay of our troops 6 months in Mexico will not make the whites stronger, braver or more powerful. On the contrary, it will increase the boldness of the Indians by showing more plainly the fears and weakness of the whites.

We hate all patch work, all half measures. We have always been opposed to the Treaty, because we never believed that Mexico could reorganise her Government and her people after they were conquered by the United States. If a peace could be rendered certain & secure—a peace which would not produce to both armies results worse than those produced by a continuance of the war, we would cordially embrace it. But if peace is to bring utter ruin to Mexico, and consequent injury to ourselves—if peace is to obliterate the remains and foundation of a civilized nation and revive on its ruins the empire of savage barbarism—if peace is to convert a neighboring Republic into a scene of constant revolution and ambitious schemes—we say that such a peace is no more to be desired than would be the opening of Pandora's box upon this devoted Republic.

At the very beginning of this war we foresaw and predicted that the annexation or occupation of Mexico would be its necessary result. Such is now the belief, as well as the desire, of the large majority of the Mexicans, and also of many of our own citizens. Hundreds and thousands of our people, whom this war has introduced into Mexico, will settle permanently in the country. Many have formed ties which will not easily be sundered. The lovely valleys of Mexico teeming with all that could gratify the desires or tastes, will prove irresistibly attractive to many of the hardy sons of the North. The fascinating scenes of Mexico will use their charms—not in vain—upon the susceptible hearts of our countrymen. The Mexicans—the enlightened masses—have become imbued with a deep and ardent devotion to our institutions—they sigh now for American rule. This feeling will grow stronger when the retirement of our army shows the broad contrast between Mexican and American institutions. Between these two powerful parties—the American settlers in Mexico and the Mexicans of American feelings and ideas—it is evident that great changes must occur in the condition of that country. The prevalence of our ideas will lead inevitably, as it did in the case of Texas, to a movement in favor of annexation. We will then lament the loss of our twenty millions, and regret that we have all the work to go over again.—N. O. Delta.

THE TIMES,

EDITED BY DUFF GREEN.

THIS paper will be, as far as practicable, a full, fair, and candid record of passing events; but its chief purpose is to counteract the abolition movement by unmasking the designs, motives, and aims of political abolition; to demonstrate that its principles are as hostile to the rights, property, interests, prosperity, and liberty of the north, as to the rights and property of the south; and, by appeals to their intelligence and patriotism, to unite the wise and good of all parties, in every section, in a common effort to strengthen and perpetuate the Union.

The Times will be published weekly in Washington City, and sent to subscribers, through the mail.
