BRIEF WAR ITEMS.

Incidents in a camp near Winchester, with 250 men, from which he operates.

Gen. Logan says that there were hundreds of rebels who had never seen an American flag until they saw it carried into Vicksburg.

It was expected that Archduke Maximilian will formerly make known his acceptance of the Mexican throne, to the Mexican delegation on the 8th of October.

By the 1st of November the invalid corps will number 12,000 men. They will fill the places of 10,000 men who are being sent to their respective regiments in the field.

One fellow has deserted from five wives and four regiments. The provost marshals are after him, and if caught he will be allowed to commute by serving his time out with the five wives.

Through the efforts of Gen. Meredith, all the chaplains of the Union army, held as prisoners by the rebels, have been released.

Forty-two Confederate prisoners, who had taken the oath of allegiance, and violated the same in divers ways, were recently tried at Washington by a court-martial.

There are now at Belle Isle, near Richmond, some ten thousand Union prisoners, who are mostly without coats or hats, and are compelled to sleep in the open air.

Major Wileman, of the 18th Kentucky Regiment, who was wounded in the battle of Chickamauga, and who lately returned home, was taken from his house in Pendleton county, Kentucky, on Monday, by a gang of guerrillas, stripped of his clothing, tied to a tree and shot.

The New South says: "It will be noticed as a most singular coincidence that one of the fifteen historic shells recently thrown into Charleston city by Gen. Gilmore shivered the statue erected some years since in front of the court house of the doomed city."

Rebel deserters arriving in the Army of the Potomac, represent the Rebel army as very bad off for shoes, owing to Charleston and other ports which they heretofore derived their supplies from abroad being inaccessible to blockade runners.

Brig. Gen. J. A. Garfield, chief of staff at Chattanooga, telegraphs as follows from that place to Brig. Gen. Granger at Nashville:

Arrst the officers who surrendered at McMinville, and have them tried for their conduct in that affair. Those who surrendered will be disgraced and punished.

Gen. Burnside, advancing along the East Tennessee Virginia Railroad on Saturday overtook the Rebel force under McDowell and Gen. Williams, at Blue Springs.

The enemy were in a strong position, and a sharp engagement ensued, when at sundown they were driven from the field, but darkness rendered immediate pursuit impossible.

The next morning the Rebels continued their retreat on the Greenville Road with our force in pursuit. Our loss was some 60 killed and wounded.

A writer in the Richmond Whig frankly admits that our cavalry are superior to theirs. He says: "Time was Stuart's cavalry was the pride of the country."

Our correspondent at Yorktown sends us a brief account of the expedition into Mathews county, Virginia. Col. Spear, acting Brig. General, commanded the land forces, consisting of four hundred and fifty men of the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, six hundred infantry, and a battery of four pieces of artillery.

When the battle commenced near Broad Run the Pennsylvania Reserves, attached to the Fifth Corps, were resting on a field, the remainder of the corps having gone forward, when a concealed Rebel battery suddenly opened on them from a hill, half a mile distant, killing and wounding a number.

A battery attached to the Reserves returned the fire, and a brisk engagement ensued, but the vigorous assault of the Second Corps, Gen. Warren, upon the Rebel line, put them to flight before the Reserves could get a fair chance at them.

The loss of the Rebels is believed to be much heavier in killed and wounded, exclusive of the six hundred prisoners captured, who were marched past Gen. Meade's headquarters this morning, on their way to Washington.

GENERAL SICKLES GONE TO THE FRONT.

Special Telegraphic Despatches to the Inquirer.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—One of the Inquirer's special, from the army, gives full accounts of the operations within the last three days.

On Monday Gen. Meade crossed his whole force to this side of the Rappahannock, but finding no enemy in force in front, he ordered three or more corps to recross the Rappahannock on a reconnaissance in force, and marched as far as Brandy Station.

A few Rebels were met, and some skirmishing took place, with little or no loss on either side, the Rebels retiring as our troops advanced. Following Lee contemplated a movement on his right flank and in communication, Gen. Meade then ordered a retrograde movement, and his troops recrossed the Rappahannock, moving on both sides of the railroad towards Warrenton Junction.

This occupied Tuesday, the army moving up to Cedar Run and Catlett's Station.

On Wednesday the march was resumed, and the Second Corps, which brought up the rear, came suddenly on a force of Rebels in front at Auburn, near Catlett's Station.

The Rebels had posted a battery on a hill, and opened on the First Division of the Second Corps, Gen. Caldwell, the last of the rear guard, Rickett's First Pennsylvania Battery, attached to Caldwell's Division, took a position, forcing it to retire to the main body, which was following on our left and rear.

The Rebel force was Heath's Division of A. P. Hill's Corps. This fight lasted from eight to eleven o'clock, on Wednesday morning. The battle ended, the march was resumed, and when the Second Corps, in the afternoon, had reached a point between Ketter and Broad Run, on the same ground Gen. Hooker fought on Gen. Pope's retreat, they encountered a large force of Heath's and another Rebel Division formed in line of battle parallel with the railroad.

The Rebels again opened the ball with cavalry, artillery and infantry. Gen. Warren, commanding the Second Corps, soon placed his divisions in position and vigorously charged the Rebels and put them to flight, capturing six hundred prisoners, a battery of six field guns and two stands of colors. One of the guns was disabled and could not be got away. The others were taken away by hand.

The capture of the battery was made by volunteers from all three divisions of the corps and was a most gallant achievement. Our men fought splendidly, particularly the conscripts, who received the warmest praise from the officers for their bravery. Two stands of colors were captured by Corporal Thomas Glenn, a company of Eighty second New York Regiment, who took them from the color-bearer of the Twenty eighth North Carolina Regiment.

At the close of the fighting in the morning, Gen. Caldwell had the dead and wounded all brought off. The same thing was done in the afternoon by Gen. Warren, all our dead being buried and the wounded brought away. All our trains were safely withdrawn. The loss in the Second Corps, in these two battles, amounts to between five hundred and six hundred killed, wounded and missing.
