The Descriptive Catalogue is prepared to meet the wants of the present time, when the questions are asked: "What are the kinds of grapes to plant, and what (a their value)"

Graps Vines for Garden and Vineyard, of surpassing quality, and at lowest prices.

Vines for immediate bearing, which will cover a trellig the first season with bearing wood and a great quantity of fruit.

-Vines for Vineyard planting of excellent quality, and at prices scarcely above the cost of production. I offer and cheapness.

This season the new kinds of grapes have everywhere

This season the new kinds of grapes have everywhere shown the degree of their superiority over our former best kinds to be so great that Isabella and Catawha have sincest passed from consideration, and it was not a little gratifying to me to learne from all quarters that the grapes which, received the premiums were generally borns on vines of my production; and I have hundreds of letters giving accounts of trials made of my vines in competition with others for production and hardiness, all streaking the same thing.

borns on vines of my production, and I have hundreds of letters giving accounts of trials made of my vines in competition with others for production and hardiness, all speaking the same thing.

I make an extract from a letter by one of our most distinguished borti-afturalists on a visiting tour in the vicinity of flartford: "Although I shall see you soon, and teit you hew gratifying the sight which the excelent performance of your vines has almost uniformly afforded and always when your directions have been followed. I cannot furbear mentioning a few instances in this letter. One is a case in Manchester where vines of your production, three years from planting, are carrying a crop of Delawares that are worth a journey to believe the side of those from another quarter, five years odd, for which a much larger price was paid, and which have not one-flith as, much weight, of fruit of as innessurably inferior quality. The purchaser-showed me, by calculation breed upon the value of the fruit now on the vines, that your vines were cheeper at the price which he paid than the others would have been if held received them free with a gratuity of $2 each with every vine. Mir. Moftier was right when he decided to plant may vineyard until after thorough investigation, when it had become clearly apprient that my best course was to trust fully to your judgment, and I determined to follow your directions implicitly in all matters pertaining to the vineyard, and I have only regretited that I had not taken this course one or two years somer. I have not been disappeinted in any one point except that the performance has uniformly surpassed my most sanguine expectation, as well as your promises to call and see that at its right before I begin. The bushels of belawares and binans with which the vines are now loaded, when only on the second year, and the excelence and beauty of the fruit have warmed me with an enthusiasm-for the undertaking that is not ununingled with graticule to you for the full and explicitly directions given in yo
