SUMMARY OF WAR NEWS.

On Tuesday night, the 3d inst., Lieut. Gen. Grant commenced crossing the Rapidan, and on Wednesday his entire army was across with the exception of Burnside's corps. Brisk skirmishing commenced on Wednesday, but there was no general engagement until Thursday afternoon, when Hill made a desperate assault upon Hancock's corps, and the battle lasted until night, without decided advantage to either side, save that Hancock held his line and had repulsed Hill's attack. This was in the dense Wilderness in an angle between the Rapidan and Mine Run; and the aim of Lee was to cripple Grant's army before it could get on favorable ground. On Thursday night Burnside joined Grant, having made a forced march from Manassas, and at five o'clock on Friday morning the entire Union army was in line of battle. The attack was made by Ewell at daylight, and from that time until night the battle raged with fearful fury. The whole of both armies were engaged, and a series of the most desperate assaults were made upon General Grant's lines, but his gallant army stood like adamant. Sometimes one side would yield a temporary advantage, and again the other would recede, and the same ground was often fought over three or four times as the tide of advantage would surge from one side to the other. The day closed upon one of the most desperate and deadly battles in the history of war, with little or no perceptible advantage to either side. It was, however, substantially a defeat to Lee, for he had failed in his exhausting effort to break Grant's army, and had weakened himself much more than his foe. But he did not yet abandon his favorite tactics of hurling massed columns upon our lines. Near midnight he broke upon Sedgwick, who held Grant's right wing, with such impetuosity that he flanked Sedgwick's extreme wing, threw several brigades into confusion, and captured Generals Seymour and Shaler, and some 700 men. Beyond this, however, the assault failed—the main wing was invulnerable and the foe had to retire again. On Friday night Gen. Grant threw his right wing clear over to his left, and thus advanced his line toward Spotsylvania, and threatened Lee's right flank. Lee at once surrendered the battle-ground of the Wilderness, and on Saturday the fighting was renewed on new lines, and from Saturday until Tuesday the armies were engaged daily with more or less desperation, without decisive results—Gen. Grant over holding his own and at times gradually advancing. On Tuesday of last week, the foe seemed resolved to make another death-struggle to break Grant's lines and thus cripple him so that he must retreat to Manassas, Burnside and Hooker by retreating back toward Washington. The rebel supplies were evidently becoming exhausted, as a desperate but unsuccessful attack had been made on our trains the day before; and the stand of Tuesday was doubtless made with the double purpose of permanently arresting Grant's advance and breaking his lines to procure supplies. The battle was most desperate, but the power of the rebels was waning, while the gallant Army of the Potomac had been infused with new life under its persevering commanders, and the day was closed with positive disadvantage to the rebels and their ranks terribly shattered. For the first time our artillery was used with fearful effect on that day—the dense timber of the Wilderness rendering artillery useless—and their loss was manifestly greater than ours. On Wednesday the struggle was renewed, but the foe made feeble resistance compared with the day before. It was evident that they were fast failing either in supplies or in confidence of success, and on Wednesday night Hancock's corps was so disposed as to be ready for an assault before day-break on Thursday morning. Gallantly did the brave young Pennsylvanian perform his task, and over 4,000 prisoners and 36 guns were captured by his command. Being in a strong position, the rebels defended stubbornly the remainder of the day, and also on Friday, but Grant was steadily advancing and his decisive victory was evidently only a question of time. The battle of Thursday was decisive—it had exhausted the foe beyond further endurance, and although in a chosen and entrenched position, they were unable to hold it against the invincible columns of Grant and Meade. On Friday evening they abandoned their line, and Saturday morning found them retreating across beyond the Potomac over the Ta river, and taking up a new line on the latter stream. Gen. Grant at once crossed his army over the Potomac at the close of nine days of continuous fighting he found himself wholly master of the battle fields, and his foe retreating before him. Since then we have not, at the time of this writing, had news of Grant's advance, and it is probable that the storm has so swollen the streams that he cannot do so for a few days. Thus nobly, wisely, and with matchless skill did Lieut. Gen. Grant and Maj. Gen. Meade direct the ever heroic but ill-starred Army of the Potomac to decisive victory. Grant and Meade during indeed will be the laurels won by Grant and his grand Army!

But the movements immediately under Gen. Grant across the Rapidan were but a part of the grand operations he was conducting. From the sanguinary fields of the Wilderness and the Potomac he directed the movements of other columns to whom was assigned most important auxiliary duties. Gen. Butler moved up the Peninsula, landed South of the James River, severed Richmond from Petersburg and invested Fort Darling. On Saturday he had the Fort cut off from all reinforcements, had defeated Beauregard and driven him back into Petersburg, had the Monitors with him just below the Fort, and thus was within eight miles of the rebel capital, and threatening it daily. Gen. Sheridan, chief of Cavalry under Gen. Grant, had been sent round to Lee's rear to sever his lines with Richmond, and destroy his stores, and the work was most completely done. He destroyed the entire road from Lee's rear to Richmond—burning every important bridge and destroying every culvert, and every car, locomotive and all the stores and munitions on the line shared the same fate. At one point he destroyed a mill and a half of rebel rations. When near Richmond he was met by Stuart and his cavalry, but they were routed and Stuart killed.

Such is a brief record of two weeks devoted to our noble armies to the execution of the grand combinations of Gen. Grant, and the circle of substantial success seems complete. The Army of the Potomac is being largely reinforced, and of Grant's early and victorious march to Richmond, we do not now entertain a doubt! All honor to the glorious Chief and his noble warriors, who have given victory and life to the Republic!

Sherman Victorious—Resaca Captured With 1200 Prisoners and Ten Guns—Johnston Retreating.

The Herald has a dispatch from Nashville dated last evening, stating that Resaca was occupied by Gen. Sherman that day, capturing 1200 prisoners and ten guns. Johnston was retreating toward Atlanta.

Particulars of the Capture of Resaca—Rebel Supply Trains Captured—Gen. Kilpatrick Wounded.

Your correspondent sends the following dispatch of a sharp fight between Sherman and Johnston.

Sharp fighting yesterday and to-day. Resaca Georgia, was captured this afternoon, with ten guns, 1200 prisoners and six rebel trains with supplies, going toward the South.

Johnston is in full retreat, with Sherman rapidly pursuing him. No estimate can be made of the rebel dead and wounded. Our own is small. Gens. Kilpatrick, Manson and Willcutt were wounded.

The railroad and telegraph connecting with Resaca were put in working order a few hours after its capture.

Capture of Yazoo City.

Vicksburg advices of the 10th say that the expedition under Gen. McArthur, sent out by Gen. Slocum, had captured Yazoo city with little resistance.

A messenger going to Kirby Smith's army was captured with dispatches from Gen. Lee to Adm. Gen. Cooper, saying that Grant's army had been repulsed and driven back towards Washington.

The rebels on the plantations confined and the most inhuman brutalities have been committed even infants being carried off and killed to terrify the women.

Gen. Slocum's raiders produced great consternation amongst the traders and speculators and the stores are closed, commerce with the enemy having been stopped. Many corrupting practices are corrected.

Late advices from Alexandria, La., indicate that Gen. A. J. Smith will be compelled to march overland to the Mississippi river, fighting his way out.

It was reported that Forrest and Roddy, with 1,000 Rebels, were threatening Huntsville and Dator, Ala., on last Saturday. Gen. Smith, at the late place had ordered all the citizens to work in the fortifications.

Latest from the Army of the Potomac.

A dispatch from the Army of the Potomac, dated the 10th, says: After ten days successive fighting, the army was yesterday allowed to rest and recruit for another struggle.

It is almost impossible to discover the exact position of the enemy, as they keep in behind the woods. Their picket lines only are within our observation.
