

From the Daily Morning Chronicle. THE SONG OF THE PEOPLE. Have you heard the glad shout that is borne on the breeze?

HOW ESCAPED. A SOLDIER'S STORY. With some twenty men under my command, I was scouting in one of the Southern States, when we were suddenly fired upon from an ambuscade.

With this he walked away a few paces, and held a consultation with some of his interior officers, while we awaited the result with feelings that were far from pleasant.

"Why this severity?" inquired I. "I believe it is in retaliation for some offence of the Federal," he replied, looking at me with some commiseration expressed in his hard, some countenance.

"How far from here to the station, Colonel?" "Between six and seven miles, by the main road—two miles less by a cross route only travelling on foot."

"Through what kind of a country does the road pass?" "Wild, rugged, and thinly settled."

"You will take the nearest route to the railway station, across the fields," he continued, and thence proceed in the course of your destination.

falling voice and with tear-dimmed eyes; "and it shall be my constant prayer that, should the dark hour of tribulation ever come to you, you will find returned that kindness and mercy which you have shown to a fellow mortal in distress."

"The Colonel, who was visibly affected, now took his final leave of me with the remark that it would not be prudent for him to hold any further conversation with me."

"Excuse me boys," I said, with a smile, "for taking the first drink, as I wish to make sure of at least one share while it is going; and with this I put the flask to my lips and held it there long enough to have drunk half of it though not a drop had been drawn."

"Just so!" said I, pretending to drink again. In this way the flask was passed some two or three times in the course of the next ten minutes, and then, with a feeling of joyful relief, I saw that the last drop had been drained.

"Who's that?" inquired a timid voice. "A hungry soldier, who has lost his way," I replied. "For the love of Heaven, give me something to eat, and I will go on and leave you in peace."

"I pushed on in the dark till I came to a rocky hill, where finding something like a cave, I crept in; and spent the night, resuming my journey at the first streak of light."

"I could not remain where I was in safety, and as soon as it became dark, I boldly struck down through the woods into a road, and setting my face northward, hurried forward, regardless of consequences."

From the Press. THE NEW MARRIAGE. Come all men from the east and west, and let us sing the next epithalamium. Let joy prevail throughout the land, for after many years of bitter war between the radicals and Copperheads kind, and go to church on the appointed morning. We then may greet the new couple and wish them all manner of happiness, and many, many returns of the day.

"Who are to be the happy pair? Nay, do not laugh and turn away, and chide and deride them; for if they are to love and cherish each other, what right have we to interfere or proscribe impediments?"

"This of course, will be a happy union. Ill-natured people tell us that there has been much ill-feeling between the families, and that great scandal will ensue. But if they love each other, what does it matter?"

"It is not for us to be too busy with our neighbors' affairs, or to ask impertinent questions. The New Nation tells us that the main cause of this affectionate sympathy between the Copperheads and Radicals is 'the hatred of Lincoln.'"

"I pushed on in the dark till I came to a rocky hill, where finding something like a cave, I crept in; and spent the night, resuming my journey at the first streak of light."

THE WAXING REBELLION. A contemporary very handsomely puts the following facts together. They are worth looking at by the faint-hearted as well as the disaffected:

Yet there are still those who think the rebellion cannot be put down, and who say that "if Grant is beaten in a battle that is the end of the war." As if our armies had not already been beaten in more than one battle.
