ON A SLEEPING INFANT.

To the Editors of the Franklin Repository:

The touching lines on "A Child Asleep" in your paper of the 11th of October, awakened the pleasant memories of forty years ago. One who now holds a distinguished judicial position under our government was asleep in his cradle, and the sweet smile of infant purity sparkled on his lip, and was the occasion of the following lines.

It is one of nature's kindest arrangements, that we treasure highly, things which are created by those we love. It may be for that reason I am not an impartial judge, but I have ever thought them wonderfully beautiful. Long years bygone they were in print. If they please your fancy, Messrs. Editors, will you send them out on the world again. B. W. A.

Dear Charles, now thou art dreaming,
I know it by the smile
That on thy face is beaming,
As thou dost sleep awhile.
I would that I could see, now,
The picture bright and fair,
Young fancy makes for thee, now,
As thou art sleeping there.

Perhaps thy mother's singing
Is sounding in thine ears;
Or her bright smile is bringing
A solace for thy tears:
Thy fancy need not wander,
Thou need'st not dream to see,
Thy mother's heart grow fonder
Or closer cling to thee.

For through life's rugged going,
Wherever thou shalt stray,
Her winning smile still glowing,
Dear child will on thee play;
Nor has the earth another,
A lover or a friend,
That like thy nursing mother,
Will love thee without end.

But if thy thoughts are dwelling
On life that seems so fair,
Distant hope is telling
That blesses elsewhere there,
The vision trust not, boy,
The charm will soon be breaking,
For bright as dreams of joy
Must be destroyed by waking.

And life thou soon will know.
Not always bright is seeming,—
Our woes thus deeper grow
While tired of bliss are dreaming.
Yes, I could tell thee, child,
Of thousand things the dearest,
That on my days have smiled,
Yet sting me the severest.

But time own days of youth,
As onward they impel thee,
Will show the wretched truth,
More clear than I can tell thee.
Then dream dream on, and smile.
Thou lovely, sleeping, dear one,
If dreams could not beguile,
What were there here to cheer one.

And thus I last and all's long sleep,
Sweet and serenely may't thou lie,
May angels round thee vigils keep
And Mercy sing thy lullaby.

HOW I BEGAN LIFE.

I began life by running away from home. Boileau, we are told, was driven into his career by the want of wit and the peck of a turkey. Attila started in life with no other cause and capital than an old sword, which he was adroit enough to palm off for the divine weapon of Mars; and Robespierre owed his political career to wearing fine stockings—and there heard "words which burn," that fired his soul, and determined his course in life. My running away from home arose from a minor mortification, caused by carrying a pretty girl over the brook.

Donald Lean and myself were good friends at fourteen years of age, and we both regarded with a little more than friendship pretty Helen Graham, "our oldest girl at school." We romped and danced together, and this lasted for such a length of time that it is with feelings of bewilderment that I look back upon the mystery of two lovers continuing friends. But the time came, as must, when jealousy lit her spark in my boyish bosom, and blew it into a consuming flame.

Well do I remember how and when the "green-eyed" perpetrated this incendiary deed. It was on a cold October evening, when Helen Donald and myself were returning, with our parents, from a neighboring hamlet. As we approached a ford where the water ran somewhat higher than ankle deep, we prepared to carry Helen across, as we were accustomed to, with hands interwoven, "chair fashion," and thus carried our pretty passenger over the brook. Just as we were in the middle of the water—which was cold enough at the time to have frozen anything like feeling out of boys less hardy than ourselves—a faint pang of jealousy nipped my heart. Why it was, I knew not, for we had carried Helen fifty times across the brook ere now, without emotion, but this evening I thought or fancied that Helen gave Donald an undue preference
