THE OLD MAN'S SONG. Oh, don't be sorrowful, darling! Nor don't be sorrowful, pray!

For, taking the year together, my dear, There isn't more night than day.

There's more weather, my darling! There's more weather, my dear! But taking the year together, my dear, There isn't more night than day.

There's more weather, my darling! There's more weather, my dear! But taking the year together, my dear, There isn't more night than day.

There's more weather, my darling! There's more weather, my dear! But taking the year together, my dear, There isn't more night than day.

There's more weather, my darling! There's more weather, my dear! But taking the year together, my dear, There isn't more night than day.

Franklin Depository.

But the accumulated wealth of years melted away under speculation's frown, and the beggarly merchant, with his little family, wandering westward, to retrieve his fallen fortunes.

After months of ceaseless searching, which drained the last dollar from his light purse, he obtained another situation; but, within three weeks a heavy robbery upon Edward Wynne, an under clerk asserted to have seen the conical the money; and because he was a friendless stranger the tale obtained ample credence.

Wealthia Wynne, her husband in a prisoner's cell, was left to the mercenary and unfeeling, to fold her babes to her bosom and endure suffering—suffering which she had never known; but here was not a heart to sink under this fortune, and though she had little hope for the future, she had her path, she unflinchingly trudged the daily route of almost superhuman labor to procure bread for her helpless children. God only could read the future, and in His wisdom her faith rested.

It was evening; and in the library of a noted lawyer the lamp brightly shedding its brightest lustre upon the face of an elderly gentleman sitting by the table, his eyes coming to rest on a parchment in preparation for the coming court.

Lines of care and suffering creased the broad brow, and shadow the dark eyes with a kindly glow, as though he had passed through the fiery furnace of sorrow.

He is interrupted by a servant announcing, "A woman on business, sir." And with a kind respect he rises to greet the poor man in the jail, "What is it, my darling?"

"The jailer says, my dear, that the poor man in the jail, he has no one to take care of him, and he begs to be sent to the jail, it makes me feel sorry."

"Who told you about him, Willie?" "The jailer, my dear, and after we came home she told me he had no friends, and no money to get a lawyer to—no! I don't know what, but Mrs. Haggood said it would get him out of jail, and she would pay for the lawyer, and would you do it without money?"

"Say yes, papa, do please." "What is it, my darling?" "The jailer says, my dear, that the poor man in the jail, he has no one to take care of him, and he begs to be sent to the jail, it makes me feel sorry."
