FIRST ANNUAL MESSAGE OF ANDREW JOHNSON, President of the United States.

READ IN CONGRESS TUESDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1865.

Fellow-Citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives: To express gratitude to God, in the name of the People, for the restoration of the Union, and for the preservation of the Republic, is my first duty in addressing you.

I found the States suffering from the effects of a civil war. Resistance to the General Government appeared to have exhausted itself. The United States recovered possession of the forts and arsenals, and their armies were in the occupation of every State which had attempted to secede.

But while I have no doubt that now, after the close of the war, it is not competent for the General Government to extend the elective franchise in the several States, it is equally clear that good and better things are in store for the people.

The maintenance of the Union brings with it the support of the State Governments in all their legitimate powers. It is the duty of any State Government to renounce its own place in the Union, or to ally itself with the Union.

The "sovereignty of the States" is the language of the Confederacy, and not the language of the Constitution. The laws of the United States shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made or which shall be made in pursuance thereof, shall be the supreme law of the land.

It is my duty to express my sincere sympathy for the freedmen, and to urge upon you the necessity of their restoration to the rights of citizenship.

progress made in the construction of the Pacific railroad, and furnishes information in reference to matters of local interest in the District of Columbia. It also presents evidence of the successful operation of the Homestead Act.

The most intelligent observer among political economists has not failed to remark, that the public debt of a country is a reflection as to its people are free; that the debt of a republic is a reflection of its credit.

It appears from the report of the Secretary of the Navy, that while at the commencement of the war the navy consisted of 330 vessels of all classes and description, armed with 3,000 guns, and manned by 51,000 men.

The revenue system of the country is a subject of the highest importance to the people, and should command the earnest consideration of Congress. The Secretary of the Treasury will lay before you a full and detailed report of the receipts and disbursements of the last fiscal year.

Our Government springs from and is made for the people. It is the duty of the Government to protect the rights of the people, and to secure to them the enjoyment of the fruits of their industry.

It is my duty to express my sincere sympathy for the freedmen, and to urge upon you the necessity of their restoration to the rights of citizenship.

WOL. 72... WHOLE NO. 3736.

When the organization of our Government, under the Constitution, the President of the United States delivered his inaugural address to the two Houses of Congress, he said to them, and through them to the country, and to mankind, that "the preservation of the sacred fire of liberty and the destiny of the republican model of government are justly considered as deeply, perhaps as finally staked, on the experiment just to be tried by these two Houses of Representatives."

The Department of Agriculture, under its present organization, is accomplishing much in developing and utilizing the vast agricultural capabilities of the country, and for information respecting the details of its management, reference is made to the annual report of the Secretary.

Our commerce with South America is about to receive encouragement by a direct line of steamships to the ports of Brazil, Peru, and Chile. The distinguished party of men of science who have recently left our country to make a scientific exploration of the natural history and resources of the Empire of Brazil, have received from the Emperor that generous and liberal patronage which has been expected from his constant friendship for the United States.

Our domestic contest, now happily ended, has left some traces in our relations with one at least of our neighboring nations. The annual cord of belted rights to the insurgent States was unprecedented, and has not been justified by the issue.

There is both a Spanish and French proverb which says: "A melon and a woman are hard to choose." The service was read, and then with cat-calls, oaths and yells they rolled out to the nearest public house to drown their sorrows.
