Correspondence of the Philadelphia Ledger. WASHINGTON, Saturday Feb. 10, 1844.

There is, at this moment, nothing new or exciting here, except the evening parties, routs, soirces, &c., in which English and French society are alternately imitated, according to the knowledge and means of the amphytrions. The President, who is the most amiable and sociable man in private life, and whose suavity of manners is the theme of general admiration, conducts himself with as much ease, as if social intercourse and the cultivation of general good feelings, and not the Presidency over the mammoth Republic of the nineteenth century, where his chief occupation and delight. No man like himself can so completely throw aside the rancor engendered by partisan warfare, or meet, at his own festive board, with unfeigned cordiality, those who have opposed, persecuted and slander. ed him. I have no doubt whatever that the President entertains, at the White House, many a man whose botter feelings upbraid him for having made his acts and these of his administration the theme of rule invective and party aumosity. It is for such and similar reasons I approve of the most extended social intercourse, for there is nothing like the familier interchange of thoughts, under the moderating influence of etiquette, (which properly teaches us to respect ourselves in others.) to file away the rough edges passions, roused by the strife of factions. Washington, more than any other city in the Union. offers ample opportunity of this sort ; for it is not merely a wealthy clique of one or the other partisan persuasion which here dictates the law of society. The resident citizens are poor, and it is therefore but rank and station, based on intellectual eminence, which rule the fashions of the day; while the habit of political opponents meeting each other, from day to day, on neutral ground, for the purpose of exchanging civilities with one anoth r, has had a salutary influence on their mutual appreciation of each other's qualities. An ultra, in society, ceases to be a gentleman; and it is a current saving here, that vehemence in politics, especially in conversation, shows at once "the strang or" in Washington.

The Cabinet appointments, as the time for the Convention approaches, cease to be of that absorbing interest, and to create that politicel anxiety, which they are went to do, at the period immediately succeeding the death of General Harrison, and we learn now, with some composure, that Governor Gilmer will, in all probability, he nominated on Tuesday next, as Secretary of the Navy, and, as might be supposed confirmed. The Senate has buried its spite, or rather exhaused it, in the late rejections of the Cabinet nomirations, and will not soon again provoke the illwill of the President.

The confirmation of the Hon. II mry A. Wise, Minister to Brazil, by so large a majority. ast be considered as a prace offering, as an earnest to retract the heavy verdicts pronounced enformer occasions, and will evidently place the administration in a position less hostile to the Whigs.

Judge Wilkins, who was formerly talked of as Secretary of the Navy, will be nominated for the BERLIN, NOVEMBER 15, 1843. Though not entirely unacquainted with the English language, the German is so well known in the United States that I venture, dear sir, to write to you in my native tongue. It is in that tongue only that I can, in the fulness of my heart, express the great pleasure my election as a corresponding member of the National Institute at Washington has given me. In the first place, every European must value such an honor more highly than when a similar distinction is conferred from places less distant. In the next place. I behold in it a sort of invitation to an undertaking for which I need more encouragement than many others need. From my plan to visit the United States in the coming Spring many bave attempted to dissuade me, saving that I was too old, that I could inform myself sufficiently at home, or that (being entirely unknown there) I would hear and learn but little.

Having been occupied so long with historical researches on the PAST, I was, however, resolyed for once to explore the land of the PHESENT land where not the ruins only of times long gone by are planted, but all is full of youthful, active life of public life-the anti-social and destructive the United States, but to discuss such questions as whether they cat tobacco, use two-pronged forks, etc. Others, who protend to examine more deep'y, lament that they did not find judges with periwigs, the right of primogeniture, an established church, lords and prelates, hordes of soldiers and officers, and so forth.

Far from being impressed with such ropre sentations and views, I became still more stubborn and pertinacious in my gainsaying. Whether, however, N rth America is such as I imag ne and picture it to myself, 1 cannot now decide ; and whether I should go there remained long undecided. At this juncture came my reception into your Institute as a favourable, encouraging omen. I may now with redoubled confidence hope for the friendly information, and that I will be considered and received as a grateful pupil.

With the highest regard, I remain your most obedient servant. V. RAUMER. To F MARKOE, JR., E-q.
