CANAL AND RAILROAD TRAVELLING .- Mr. G. Converse, of Columbia, Pa., has exhibited to us the model of a new mode of conveying passengers and freight by railroad and canals, which is well calculated to obviate the difficulties of transition from one mode of conveyance to the other and is also designed to supersede the section boats now in use. The canal boat is propelled by steam, and is constructed upon a new principle, so as to avoid injury in the banks of canals by the action of the paddle wheels, and carries six moveable cabins, which may be thrown into a single dining room, or separated into distinct state-rooms. These cubins may be readily shifted with their baggage, freight, or other contents, to cailroad tracks, upon which they form convenient cars. They are so constructed as to afford convenient sleeping room each for six persons. and the inventor is sanguine that they will resceive universal opprobation, and by the case and expedition with which they may be transferred from the boats to the tracks, and back again. will economize at least twenty-four hours of the time so consumed in the passage from Philadelphia to Pittsburg .- Phil, Ledger.

ANOTHER LIFE SAVED .- John H. Frost, deck hand on board the steamboat Hornet, having taken a severe cold by exposure in securing a fellow from a watery grave, at the foot of Market street, Philadelphia, one of those cold nights in February last : his head and face had become so swollen, that to use his own words he could scarcely see-attended with violent pains throughout his whole body; was usged by his friends to try Brandreth's Vegetable Universal Pills : he did so, and is happy to state that two boxes of this celebrated medicine completely restored him-
