

From the N. York Spirit of the Times
The Night "Old Armstead" brought the News.

BY THE VERY YOUNG 'UN.
Lancaster, Pa., Nov. 25, 1844.
As the Presidential election of '44 was drawing to its close, and the "returns" from respective States began coming in, the excitement which had been growing with the growth of the campaign, and strengthening with its strength, could now no longer be restrained, but showed itself as well in the eager countenances, as in the bitter words and hasty actions of men. Business in this part of the country was almost entirely laid aside; men noted for their devotion to their pursuits and their interests, might have been seen at any hour of the day, only loitering about, discussing the probable issue with as much vehemence as though their whole fortunes depended upon it. Thousands upon thousands of dollars were staked upon the result; and when it became known that the vote of New York was to decide the conflict, the eyes of the whole people were turned upon her with feelings of the deepest solicitude.

On the arrival of the day upon which the final news was to reach Montgomery, having a large amount of money bet upon the election, and feeling very anxious in regard to it, I determined to send an express for the intelligence. Accordingly, writing to a friend to send my messenger back as soon as the mail arrived, which I knew would be about 11 o'clock at night, I started "Old Armstead"—a faithful old negro of mine—a great favorite in the village—a "pious Democrat"—with particular and pressing instructions to keep particularly sober, start home as soon as he got the news, not to ride "Traveler" hard, and to be certain and be back before day. Immediately after he left, it became known in town that he had sent "Old Armstead" to Montgomery after the news, and to give every one of all parties the benefit of the express. I started upon his arrival at home that night, to fire one barrel of my gun in the event that Mr. Clay was elected, and if Mr. Polk was the chosen one, I was to fire both.

At my usual time I went to bed—but not to sleep. The "lead certainly" of the intelligence was soon to receive, added to a nervous strain to the safety of my investments as lavishly made upon Mr. Polk, banished rest from my pillow. However, about three o'clock in the evening I had fallen into an uneasy slumber, and was dreaming of counting money and seeing new clothes, when I was suddenly aroused by the clattering of a horse's hoofs against the door, at least a quarter of a mile off. I raised up in the bed, and in a moment recognized the strong, powerful legs of my "Traveler." Springing to the floor, with my feelings to a tumult of anxiety, I lit a candle and jumped to the door, when "Old Armstead" seeing me, and having about half a gallon on his mind, shouted out, "Master, Mr. Polk's elected!" Not taking time to remark "Old Armstead" for qualifying his news with so strong an expression, I sprang to my gun, which was sitting ready cocked for the occasion, let loose one barrel, and had my finger on the other trigger, when the idea struck me to hold on a minute, and see the effect produced by the one barrel. Before the re-verboration had died away, but jumped Bill Thompson, the most virtuous, bitter Whig in the village, from the door of his house, regardless of the bitter cold night with nothing on but his shirt, (for he had just arisen from the bed on the report of the gun,) and, as he hit the ground, he yelled rather than yelled "Hurrah for Clay! I am a made man, he—! Hurrah for Clay!"

In a minute more there came tearing up the street to Thompson's house, half a dozen half-dressed Whigs, yelling like so many unhalloated devils, "Hurrah for Clay and Frelinghuysen!" I could stand it no longer, and with feelings of the most unalloyed rapture, pulled down the "hammer" on the second barrel. If a thunder-bolt from Heaven had fallen amongst them, it could not have produced more consternation. Bill Thompson fell flat on his face and groaned, "Oh! my head!—! Broke! Smashed all to d—!"

By this time the street was filled by the shout of the triumphant Democrats and the curses of the disappointed Whigs. I ran back to put on my pantaloons, on my return to the crowd I found Old Armstead on the ground with a dozen men around him laughing; on approaching them, I heard him yell out "Yah! yah! yah! Bless God, dis night will be de def of me, yah! and then he would roll over in another paroxysm of laughter and press his hands to his side. "Yah! yah! yah! I hab been heep of tings in Old Virginia, but I never seed nothing to beat dis!" On some one enquiring of him what was the matter he replied, "Oh! am laughing at the way Master loaded Mr. Thompson—Yah! yah! yah!"

By this time day had broken, and the crowd had assembled at the grocery, where about half of them were drunk. In the midst of the confusion, in walked "Old Armstead," and said, "Master, I'm tired Traveler hab got de bits; I hab oblerged to rid him very hard his night to bring de news—He very sick."
