

Gen. Taylor in Battle. We have all long looked for some description of "Rough and Ready" during the critical fight at Buena Vista, and are at last gratified to find it in the following, which was furnished to the Cincinnati Chronicle by Lieutenant Conine:

"By way of illustrating an important characteristic of Gen. Taylor, to wit, determination, I will briefly relate a scene that occurred on the battle ground at Buena Vista, during the action of the 23d. At the time when the fortunes of the day seemed extremely problematical—when many of our side even despaired of success—old Rough and Ready, as he is not inaptly styled, whom you must know, by the bye, is short, fat, and dumpy in person, with remarkably short legs—took his position on a commanding height, overlooking the two armies. This was about three or perhaps four o'clock in the afternoon. The enemy, who had succeeded in gaining an advantageous position, made a fierce charge upon our column, and fought with a desperation that seemed for a time to insure success to their arms. The struggle lasted for some time. All the while, Gen. Taylor was a silent spectator, his countenance exhibiting the most anxious solicitude, alternating between hope and despondency. His staff, perceiving his perilous situation, (for he was exposed to the fire of the enemy,) approached him and implored him to retire. He heeded them not. His thoughts were intent upon victory or defeat. He knew not at that moment what the result would be. He felt that that engagement was to decide his fate. He had given all his orders and selected his position. If the day went against him he was irretrievably lost; if for him, he could rejoice in common with his countrymen, at the triumphant success of our arms.

"Such seemed to be his thoughts—his determination. And when he saw the enemy give way and retreat in the utmost confusion, he gave free vent to his pent up feelings. His right leg was quickly disengaged from the pommel of his saddle, where it had remained during the whole of the fierce encounter—his arms, which were calmly folded over his breast, relaxed their hold—his feet fairly danced in the stirrups, and his whole body was in motion. It was a moment of the most exciting and intense interest. His face was suffused with rapture. The day was won—the victory complete—his little arm saved from the disgrace of a defeat, and he could not refrain from weeping for joy at what had seemed to so many, but a moment before, as an impossible result. Long may the noble and kind-hearted old hero live to enjoy the honors of his numerous and brilliant victories, and many other honors that a grateful country will ere long bestow upon him."

Major Sumner—Major Sumner, who led the Rifles in the attack of the 17th, on the enemy's advanced position, at Cerro Gordo, made a narrow escape. In the charge, he was struck on the head by a musket bullet. The bullet was flattened to the thickness of a dime, and remained on its surface the print of the Major's hair, and yet, strange to say, excepting the severance of an artery, he sustained no serious injury. The artery was taken up, and at the last accounts the Major was doing well. The excellent officer—accounted one of the best tacticians and disciplinarians in the army—may certainly tolerate himself on the strength of his chronological defences. He will never find any difficulty in getting a liberal policy in any of our life insurance offices.

Afraid of the Bitter. During the height of the opposition between the two steamboat lines, running from the Kennebec to Boston, last summer, and just as the rival boats were making ready to start, a wagon hove in sight, in which was an old lady, with an accompaniment of band-boxes and bundles, evidently equipped for a journey. The respective agents of the two lines sprang towards her. "Take the Marshall, ma'am!—fine boat. 'Try the Penobscot, new boat—built last summer, commanded by the favorite of everybody—Capt. —, &c., &c.—The boys and loafers around, echoed the claims of their favorite in concert. "Hurrah for the Penobscot! 'Go to the John Marshall." The old lady, who had probably never seen a steamboat before, and whose chief notion of the varnished was connected with their boiler-bursting propensities, was almost beside herself with terror, at the hubbub.

"O, Lord! I wish I'd never stirred a step—if I'd known there was to be such an awful time as this, I'm sure I wouldn't. The pesky bidders—I know they'll bust—every body's looking after me; and nobody's attending to 'em. There, go right away, all of you, I'm going straight back. I couldn't rest a wink for fear of them pesky bidders."

"You need give yourself no anxiety on account of the bidders in the Marshall," said the agent of the M. "they are new and sound, and couldn't be made to burst."

"Are you sure of it?" said the old lady, evincing symptoms of a favorable disposition towards the Marshall—"you ain't a tryin' to practice on the credulity of a poor lone woman, I hope?"

"No fear of me—sound as a teakettle," was the reply.

The old lady was about descending from the wagon, to embark in the Marshall, when No. 2 stepped up.

"Madam," said he, in a serious tone, "no doubt the Marshall's boilers are good enough, but the best boilers are dangerous things.—We know that a great many people had been killed by them—especially of late—and we took the boilers out of our boat three weeks ago."

"You did," said she; "that's the boat for me, then. Jones (to the boy in the wagon) pass out the basket, and the bonnet box, and the umbrellas, and parasol—and don't forget the new shoes and doughnuts, under the seat. Tell Sally I went in the boat without any bidders, and she need have no fears of me."—Bostonian.
