Don't Like It.

It is amusing to witness the wriggling of the Republican, of this place, to keep in countenance the followers and true believers of Abolition principles. The certainty of defeat next October has become apparent to the knowing ones and is creeping into the masses with marvelous rapidity. The Democratic party is in a good state of discipline and can afford to look with great complacency upon the demoralized forces of the enemy. Some of them die hard, and judging from their meek but imploring faces and occasional religious demeanor and patriotic sentiments, one would suppose helding office was a very good thing, and difficult to part with. They must give way that better men may take their places.
