SHELTER FOR SHEEP.

For several years past, I have noticed in the columns of the Telegraph various communications on the benefit of proper shelter for farm stock, and although I agree with their authors in the main, yet there are cases in which too much shelter may be given to some kinds of farm stock.

I will remember the maxim of "one-third more shelter one-third less feed," but we must not lose sight of the fact, that economy of food is not all we are to look at in the care of our domestic animals.

As far as my experience and observation go, I have found sheep to be a class of farm stock which during the winter may have too much shelter for their own benefit or the real benefit of the owner. With them shelter seems to produce a different effect on cattle or other farm stock.

Cattle when sheltered will consume about the same amount of food as when not sheltered, but it is evident that as it takes less to keep up the warmth of the system a larger amount is devoted to the increase in weight, and hence, "shelter is equivalent to food" only in the amount of extra fat and muscle formed, and not in the saving of food.

With sheep this is not the case, for if well sheltered they will consume considerably less food, but will neither fatten nor grow as well, and I therefore argue they may readily be, and often are, too much sheltered for the highest profit to the owner of the flock.

From the above remarks I would not wish to be understood to argue that this class of farm stock should have no shelter—far from it—but there is in everything a "golden mean" for which we should strive. Sheep do not need much protection against direct cold, but suffer much more in fleece, flesh and fat from wet than from cold. Hence, all they need in the shape of shelter is a tight-roofed shed, boarded up on three sides but entirely open on the side next to the yard.

During the first four years of our experience with sheep, I kept them entirely under a roof closed up tight on three sides, with slats in front. Every winter I was sure to lose from ten to twelve out of fifty or sixty but was satisfied on comparing notes with others of my sheep-keeping neighbors, that my sheep consumed one-third less hay and fodder than those not sheltered, but it was also very evident that they did not come out in as good order in the spring as those not well taken care of, nor were the ewes as successful in raising their lambs. Of course I was not long in looking around for the remedy, or rather for the cause, trusting that if this was removed the effect would cease.

Since I have removed the front part of the shed, and have added a small yard for the sheep to run in, and I find that, no matter how cold the weather, (if not stormy), the sheep seem to prefer the yard to the shed, and when not eating spend their time there.

One very important point in the care of sheep in winter is to furnish them with plenty of pure air at all times; with other kinds of stock it is best to guard against direct draughts of cold air, but protected as the sheep are they will not feel that which to a cow horse would be injurious. This desideratum I have attained by constructing a ventilator through the hay-mow over the sheep pen, and through the roof. At all times there is a perceptible draft through this ventilator, and if a breeze is blowing in at the open side of the shed the draft is strong enough to raise straw and chaff clear to the roof.

Another point which many of our sheep breeders and feeders neglect is that in their business two and two do not always make four. That is, when they have had a given profit from thirty or forty, one given amount of feed, they will not always double their profit with double the number of sheep consuming double the amount of feed.

Fifty will be found to be as many as can be profitably kept in one enclosure during the winter, and if more are kept there should be two flocks and consequently two enclosures. If this trouble is taken there will be a reasonable chance to double the profit the feed and sheep, but without it disappointment is almost sure to result.

My rule is that five sheep are equivalent to a steer or a cow, and hence with my facilities for keeping ten steers I either keep five steers and twenty-five sheep or fifty sheep, from which I can make more profit—Germanistown Telegraph.

SELECTING WHEAT FOR SEED. No fact is more evident than this, if wheat with which are mixed the seeds of weeds, chaff, barley, rye or other grains, is used for seed, the crop harvested will not be good clean wheat. It is equally certain that poorly developed, unripened or diseased wheat kernels cannot be expected to produce superior wheat. Yet many farmers, knowing these things, pay little attention to selecting wheat for seed. No farmer should ever sow "dirty" wheat under any circumstances. This year there should be special painstaking in many parts of the country where the wheat crop was almost entirely a failure. It will be much better to procure seed from a considerable distance and at an increased expense than to rely on that which is not suitable for the purpose. In all ordinary cases the fact that such is the best you have is not a sufficient reason.

Care in selecting varieties is also important. If one variety has failed in your vicinity, year after year, try something else, no matter how good a reputation this variety may have formerly had.

The fact that white wheat brings a higher price in the market than the amber or red wheat of the same quality should be taken into consideration. Of two varieties, equal in hardness, productiveness, etc., of course the white should be selected. In getting wheat from a distance, if you want it earlier than that you now have, go South for it, if later go North for seed. Do not be induced to sow largely of any variety simply because it has done well in other places, especially if these localities are not considerable distances.

Wheat is sown from—Over 3,000 barrels of flour are manufactured daily in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
