The "little bell" of the Secretary of State, by which he boasted he would consign any citizen to a bastile, was a death-knell to personal liberty, and a stigma upon American government. But it was upheld as a "military necessity" by every super loyal villain who "supported the goverament" as a means of help. Of the illegality of military tribunals little evidence

But

it is in vain. They must meet the issue. The people will sustain the Supreme Court, and under their decision the aggrieved party or their friends can have justice. How far special enactments can shield a culprit from the effects of crime, remains to be seen. It has been and will be again attempted. But, then, such laws, like all others, are open to revision and correction by the Supreme Court, and this last refuge of constitutional liberty has proved to be a sheet anchor to steady the ship of state in the storm of anarchy and lawlessness which now prevails. The annoucement that the Constitution is the supreme law of the land, in war as well as in peace, covers all that is required in order to allow the conservative element of the country to reassert its supremacy, and this will be done if the people are true to themselves at this crisis. - Age.

the civil law." for the assertion of which our armies lost their ablest general, and lawabiding citizens were stigmatized as "copperheads" by the malignant and cowardly pimps of a usurping military tyrant. This decision of the Supreme Court is not only a most just and convincing vindication of the position of the Democratic party during the war, but it is an equally damning proof of the usurpation, tyranny and despotism of the imbecile and reckless administration of Abraham Lincoln under the whip of New England puritanical destructionists. Forney's Press of the 20th inst., contains a suggestive comment upon the decision of the Supreme Court. The language here suggested as an argument against the decision, is most conclusive evidence that the writer properly conceives the real character of the man which that journal has so elaborately applauded as a statesman, and around whose memory it has attempted to throw the halo of martyrdom. In speaking of Justice Davis in connection with the decision, the Press says :

"This distinguished jurist was the trusted and bosom friend of Mr. Lincoln and should be among the most earnest guardians of his fame. He is the executor of his estate, and received the high office he holds from his hands; and yet we now find him standing over his grave, and declaring, in effect, not only that this, his own faithful friend and the nation's martyr President, was a felon and an outlaw in his usurpations, but that even the officers of the Government who aided in punishing his murderers are themselves murderers for having done so. Such would seem to be an inexorable sequence from the decision as reported." And so it is the "inexorable sequence," and it will be the inexorable decree of the American people and historians after half of the many acts of tyranny, murder and rime of Lincoln's rule are buried in obliv.
