PODERY. A Dream of the Night.

BY ALICE CARRY.

Now cometh the autumn time redness,

Now wild birds depart, And, darling, the old and sweet madness Is back on my heart:

For, 'twas when summer was hushing Her songs in the grove, That thou, betwirt smiling and blushing,

Didst tell me thy love. Now, light as the light on the billow In June's sunny hours,

Thou liest all night on my pillow, My flowers of flowers ! I'm drowned in thy tresses of brightness, Unloosed from their bands: I'm kissing those marvels of whiteness, Thy dear little hands!

I cover thy eyes, lest my praising Should do them a wrong, And lest I should wake thee with gazing

Too fondly and long. I say when I hear the brook's purling, And silvery fret,

Flow gently, and leave me my darling A little while yet ! Thy smile is more sweet in its beaming Of kindness for me,

Than thoughts of homes in their dreaming Of and men at sea. Without thee, my life is so lonely, And with thee, so bright,

I connet believe thou art only

A dream of the night.

Tobacco:

A VIEW PROM TOTHER SIDE. Written for The Alleghanian.

A plague on Old Fogies. Tip us a light for my "Wig-Wag," Dol- of a law of Nature.

"A lass is good, a glass is good. And a pipe to smoke in cold weather"-Especially the pipe, as I take it. Do you see those translucent volumes of beautiful blue smoke, that wreathe themselves into Berices every Sabbath morning at 10% o'clock such quaint and fantastic forms as they lazily ascend, and spread so sweet an atmosphere of scented fragrance throughout the room? Know, then, Dolphy, that compared with the satisfaction with which I contemplate those magic circles all other sensations are as nothing. The failed nectar of the gods, the dark-eyed houris

To sit and watch the pillars and columns of scented vapor as they pile themselves one on the other, and mingle and separate, and float upward, is joy beyond inspiration, or conquest in love or war. Another light, Dolphy-now we go.

In the Reginning-when this chaotic world of ours was reduced to a beautiful system of order, when the sun and moon and stars were set in the firmsurent, when the land was divided from the water, and man was created-the earth was ordered to bring forth abundantly. We have much reason to believe that the vegetable known as Tobacco was then originated.

In his first voyage of discovery, Columbus touched at Cuba. There he saw the natives snoking rolls of dried herbs or leaves, which they called tabacos. From is. Huntingdon; Associates, George W | this is probably derived the word Tobacco. It is generally admitted that the human ceonomy stands in need of some agent of a stimulating nature, either as a necessary or a luxury. Tobacco, used with moderation, is this stimulant in perfection .-

Hence its widely-extended use. We look back into the past until the dun shadows of tradition are lost in darkness, and find that Tobacco was then consumed. One of the original and aboriginal modes of enjoying the luxury was that Pror House Directors. - David O'Harvo, of the earlier inhabitants of North America.
