CAMP AT MANASSAS JUNCTION, VA., ? April 15, 1862. The Cambria Guards En Route-From Alexanandria to Manassas-Sketchings by the Way -Visit to Bull Run Battle Field-Death in the Ranks, &c.

Correspondence of The Alleghanian. On Sunday evening, 16th March, we arrived at Alexandria, and took up our quarters on a hill densely covered with a second growth of small white oak. This was quite a desirable place for camping, as wood and water were abundant. We were to have shipped from this point on the following Tuesday, and gone up the James river, but in consequence of some change in the programme, we didn't.

We remained at Alexandria for nearly four weeks, awaiting orders to ship. The First brigade, Gen. Reynolds, of our division, on Wednesday took the cars and were sent to Manassas Junction. We got orders to follow on Friday morning-also per railroad, -but on starting, we ascertained that we were not to go in the cars, but, per contra, over the "shoe-leather route," as the soldiers call it, or on foot. As you probably are aware, there is a vast difference between riding in a railroad car and marching on foot on a warm day, with | columns of last week's Alleghanian. sixty or seventy pounds avoirdupois strapthe least reliabed by the boys.

There must have been quite a large army wintered here, as the country for miles around is covered with encampments .heir quarters, too, were greatly superior o ours, the buts being large and well onstructed.

At about noon, we crossed the Stone Bridge over Bull Run, where the memole battle of the 21st of July commenced. he stream is not broad, but very deep nd rapid. We stopped here to eat and rest, and used some of the water to make our coffee!

After resting a short time, we again got into line, and arrived at Manassas Junction about three o'clock. We encamped short distance from the railroad station, where we remained until Monday morning. We then moved a quarter of a mile further back, where the ground was more dry, with plenty of wood and water.

There is nothing now to be seen of the village of Manassas save the charred and blackened ruins of the houses. The country, like that around Centreville, is level. Not far from the Junction there is a large raveyard, where over two hundred Rebel diers are buried.

On Sunday, your correspondent, in company with several others, visited the Bull Run battle field, lying in a northwestern direction from Manassas, and about four miles distant. The battle-field hills and surrounded by dense thickets of Fire Zouaves were charged upon by the Black Horse Cavalry. This took place el Horse fell can easily be distinguished by a long line of horses' bones left bleaching in the sun. Just below the scene of the charge, a number of the Fire Zouaves are buried-or, rather, left to lie where they fell, with a little dirt thrown over them! I saw the bones of several of them protruding from the mold, and I assure you it was a most horrid spectacle. We were told by an old negress, whose and particularly the Georgians, used to visit the battle-field, and, through hatred of the Zouaves, pry their bodies out d intelligent, also gave us a full history of the battle from its commencement to its end. She pointed out where the Rebel batteries were placed, the position of the troops, and the route by which Johnson brought up the reinforcements that decided the fate of the battle. We returned to camp in the evening.

Bernard Farabaugh, a member of Co. A, died last week at Alexandria Hospital, of typhoid fever.

"WHO WAS HE?" - The Question Answered .- The last Johstown Tribune, after quoting, a paragraph from the Philadelphia Press, in which a man who had formerly been one of the Secession guards over Parson Brownlow at Knoxville jail is represented as meeting and greeting that distinguished personage, during his recent trip, eastward, at Gallitzin, this county, inquires-"Who was this ex-Secession soldier? Was he a native or citizen of this county, or a traveler on the train?" We are happy to have it in our power to answer that the identical individual here spoken of is-or was, until the war broke out-a resident of Cambria county. His name is Joseph A. Kerbey, and the narrative of his adventures in the camps of the Rebels and subsequent escape therefrom is to be found in the

A QUARTERMASTER UNDER FIRE .-In the special correspondence of the New York Herald of the 17th ultimo, dated "In Camp Beyond Intrenchments, Yorktown, Va., April 12, 1862," we find the following paragraph:

At twelve o'clock, as Captain Smith, Brigade Quartermaster, was coming up York River, with a steamboat loaded with forage, the enemy saluted him with three shots. To come up Back river to 'a landing adjoining the brigade encampment, the boat had to house stood near by, that Rebel soldiers, move round a projecting bar in York River, to keep the channel, which brought him within three-quarters of a mile of their guns. The first shot-a round one-passed over the deck just att the smoke pipe. The remaining shots were shells, the first of which fell conthe graves! The negress, who was quite siderably short, and the last one went at a proportionately pleasant distance beyond. Captain Smith-as plucky a man as the next one-kept his craft moving ahead, notwithstanding these disagreeable salutations, and landed his forage safely.

We know that there are, to say the least of it, a variety of gentlemen bearing the time-honored and popular name of Smith in the Union army; yet, taking into consideration the facts that the Smith herein so honorably specified is a Captain by prefix, a Brigade Quartermaster by profession, and-to make assurance doubly sure-"as plucky a man as the next one," we are irresistibly led to the conclusion that he can be none other than our old Bearding per week, $2.00. friend, Captain George Nelson Smith, the well known ex-legislator and ex-editor, of this county, but at present serving as Brigade Quartermaster somewhere in Virginia, and most likely with the army before Yorktown. If this surmise be true, we congratulate Captain Smith on his narrow escape, and beg leave to add the hope that, though "perils thick and dangers many" surround him, he may never become "food for powder," or anything in any wise thereunto approximating.

NINETEENTH REGULAR INFANTRY .-From a letter written by the Surgeon of the above regiment to the Philadelphia Press, we extract the following complimentary mention of Company C, Capt. Williams:

We arrived at Savannah at 10 P. M., (Sunday.) and were placed on board a steamer and towed up the river eight miles, to Pittsburg Landing. We marched from the boat, during a shower of rain and a heavy cannonading from the gunboats at 3 A. M. on Monlay morning. We reposed on our arms, in fine of battle, until 7 A. M., and then entered the woods. Our division was in the centre of the line, and bore the brunt of the battle. After the first fire I lost sight of my regiment * I did not see my in the smoke. * * regiment again until noon, when Capt. T. C. In order that our readers may understand the somewhat obscure remarks concerning "Resolution | David R Evans No. 4," we beg leave to explain: This | Henry Frieze resolution, as reported by the Committee, John Ford strongly censured our late Representative, THE ELEVENTH REGIMENT, P.
