From Our Volunteers.

CAMP NEAR SHARPSBURG, Md., October 27, 1862.
LETTERS FROM CO. F, 133D PENNA. VOLS.—WHAT THEY ARE DOING, AND HOW THEY ARE DOING IT—VARIOUS ITEMS OF INTEREST.
Correspondence of The Alleghenian.
We are still here, in camp, but on the qui vive all the time for orders to move further into the land of Dixie. We have had orders for the past five days to keep two days' cooked rations in our haversacks, and be ready to march at a moment's warning. There appears to be a general movement of the Army of the Potomac in the direction of Winchester, and two successful reconnoissances across the river at Shepherdstown have been made by detachments from our division. The graybacks showed themselves in small bodies, but generally managed to make safe their retreat before we came up with them. They invariably prove themselves to be good runners, except where they have the advantage of overpowering odds.

Our camp is located about midway between Sharpsburg and the Potomac, on a beautiful piece of table land. The situation for a summer camp is excellent, but for fall or winter it will be just the reverse. The country around has been one of the best agricultural districts in the State of Maryland, but at present it is a mere waste. The rich fallows turned up for wheat prior to the great battle of Antietam are now trampled down into dust and covered with camps, while scarcely a fence is to be seen for miles around. The soldiers are necessitated to appropriate the latter for fire wood. The geological formation is that of limestone. The soil is rich and deep, and to judge from exterior appearances, the people enjoyed an enviable state of prosperity in inhabiting it. Now there is not a horse or a head of cattle of any kind to be seen on any of the farms in the neighborhood, all having been appropriated to the use and behoof of the success army or driven away by their owners. Had Maryland responded to the call of the country as did Pennsylvania when her borders were threatened by invasion, she would today be many hundreds of thousands of dollars richer; but her apathy and indifference invited the rapacious foe to her domains, and she has her reward. May she profit by it.

Yesterday was Sunday, and a more dreary one I never saw. It commenced drizzling in the morning, and by nine a. m. the rain poured down in torrents, the wind meanwhile blowing furiously from the northwest. Overcoats and gun blankets were but slim protection against the combined fury of the elements. The deluge will most likely have the effect of rendering the river unfordable, thereby preventing either army from attempting to cross unless it be on ferries or over bridges.

The 133d are at all times prepared for any emergency. Col. Speakman is laboring assiduously to perfect his regiment in the art and science of war. We have company drill from 8 till 9½ a. m.; battalion drill from 10 till 12; company drill from 1½ till 3 p. m.; and battalion drill from 3 till 6—so that we have not much time to play. Our company is progressing rapidly in obtaining a knowledge of the various evolutions pertaining to military discipline, and will in a few weeks be an efficient and well-drilled company. Capt. Jones, and the officers generally, reflect credit upon both the company and themselves.

We were thrown into quite an ecstasy of happiness on Saturday evening last by the sudden appearance in our midst of our worthy townsmen, Messrs. Thompson, Jones and Humphreys. They were warmly greeted by their many friends and acquaintances in camp. Besides their pleasant countenances, they brought with them many acceptable presents from their homes at home to the soldiers—a fact which materially increased the interest of the visit.

Our chaplain, the Rev. Mr. Hartsock, arrived amongst us, and is laboring assiduously for the moral and spiritual welfare of our regiment. I think he will be the means of doing much good. The wind blew quite a hurricane in our camp this morning, prostrating several tents, and among the number the Doctor's shop. The razing of this edifice revealed to view a goodly assortment of pills and potions, besides an imposing array of black bottles bearing the inscriptions, "Cognac," "Old Rye," etc. A furious charge was made upon these latter by early risers, resulting in the capture of a considerable number; but you should have witnessed the chagrin of the "captors" when, on examination, it was found the bottles were entirely empty! The early risers immediately held a council, and unanimously decided that it was an outrage that the M. D.'s were permitted to drink the liquor furnished by the Government for the use of the sick and wounded, thereby defrauding both the Government and the poor suffering soldier. Governor Curtin should know of the impositions practised upon the sick of this regiment. If he did, at least one of the cormorant M. D.'s who now feeds at the public crib, to the great detriment of the suffering and the disgrace of the regiment, would forthwith receive their "walking papers."

BEAUFORT, S. C., Oct. 24, 1862.
After advancing with skirmishing, some five or six miles from Mackay's Point, we found a battery very advantageously posted to rake the road. The first shot was fired at three minutes after 12. Our brigade was formed in column, closed in mass, and the 47th P. V. formed in line of battle. The shells and round shot, meanwhile, were flying in all directions, and men were falling all around us. Here Wm. Gallagher was wounded.

The 47th P. V. then charged bayonets on the battery, when it fell back through the wood and crossed a swamp some 80 or 100 yards wide, over a causeway, tore up the small bridge, and coming into position on the other side, again opened on us. We closed in to the edge of the woods and lay down in a cotton-field, while our battery was engaging that of the enemy. We lay for about fifteen minutes, being at the time under the fire of both the artillery and the musketry of the enemy, when we were ordered to advance through the woods. We did so, and got out of the range of the grape and shell. Sergeant Harry Marlett, James Reilly and J. H. Wagner were wounded as we advanced through the woods. We had not yet fired a shot.

We got through the woods considerably scattered, but got together again and lay down for about an hour, when the enemy's battery was silenced. They fell back some three miles to a stronger position, where they had intrenchments, and a marsh about one hundred and fifty or two hundred yards wide, and impassable only by the causeway and over the bridge. The latter they had destroyed.

We heard them open fire on the second line of battle when we were nearly two miles back. We came up on quick and double quick time, close after the 6th Connecticut. This regiment was ordered up on double quick, but they failed to get forward. They then came back to me—I was in the front—and ordered me forward at double quick past the 6th Connecticut and 4th N. H., and form a line of battle with our right resting on the road. I did so, and had formed our company on the right by file on the line when I was hit by a spent grape-shot, causing a severe bruise on my right leg.

At this time, and before the regiment had time to all get on the line, one of the General's aids came back hunting for sharpshooters to pick off the cannoniers from the enemy's battery. I told him we were ready to go anywhere we were needed, when he ordered us to go and engage them. We went forward along the road, the grape-shot, shell and musket-balls falling about us like hail but the Mountain boys never flinching, until we got into position and opened fire on the battery. At our second fire, the battery left the field, the enemy having no men to man their guns, as soon as any showed themselves they being shot down. At this time they were reinforced by ten thousand fresh troops, and formed a line of battle on our front, protected by rifle pits and embankments, and opened fire on us with musketry. Companies B, D, E and K were on my left, and a few companies of the 76th P. V. on my right.

fare of our regiment. I think he will be the means of doing much good.

Col. White has considerable praise.

Major Miller is brave to a fault. We had advanced about ten miles, and were within one and a half miles of the railroad, but were forced to retire without accomplishing our object. We marched back to the landing, and lay all night in the field. Went on board the Flora and arrived at Beaufort last night at ten o'clock, and came direct to camp. So close our first hard fight of the war.

CHURCH DEDICATION.

The new Catholic Church in Altoona—one of the finest church edifices in the interior of the State—will be dedicated to the service of Almighty God on Sunday week next, the 10th inst. The dedicatory services will be performed by Right Rev. Domenee, Bishop of Pittsburg, assisted by a number of the neighboring clergymen, after which an appropriate sermon will be preached by the Right Rev. Bishop. In the evening a lecture on the "Life and services of the Apostle of the Alleghenies, very Rev. Prince de Gallitzen," will be delivered by Rev. Thos. Hayden, one of the most distinguished divines in the diocese, and an orator who never fails to interest his audience. An admission fee will be charged for the benefit of the Church, which is a model of architectural beauty well worthy a visit, especially on an occasion so fraught with interest and instruction as the approaching one. We say to all who find it convenient, be sure to attend.

TEMPERANCE.—Mr. A. M. Collins, a gentleman from New York city, delivered a series of lectures in this place during the past five or six days, on the fruitful topic of Temperance. He drew large and respectable audiences, and his labors will doubtless be productive of much good in our midst. At his last lecture, on Monday evening, the nucleus of a new Temperance organization, to be composed principally of the "young and rising generation," was formed, and a hundred signatures—male and female—obtained to the paper. Mr. C. is an excellent lecturer, and pictures with striking vividness the countless horrors following in the train of the demon Intemperance. He handled the tavern keepers and lager-bier sellers without gloves, and denounced the buying and selling of intoxicating liquors as a beverage as an outrage upon society and a crime against God. He is engaged in a truly good cause—we hope he may go on prospering and to prosper.

DUNKERS' LOVE FEAST.—It was our very good fortune last Sunday to be present, for the first time, at the Levis Mohl, (as nearly as we can spell it,) or annual Love Feast, of the persuasion of Christians known as Dunkers, held at their church, in Taylor township, six miles this side of Johnstown. The ceremonies, which consist principally of preaching, praying, the washing of feet, eating the feast, &c., are exceedingly interesting, but we have no room for a full description thereof at present. The denomination of Dunkers is very numerous in this county, some three hundred belonging to this congregation alone, all of whom are well-to-do, highly respected citizens.

THE WAR IN SOUTH CAROLINA.—On our outside to-day we print full details of a recent battle near Pocotaligo, South Carolina, in which several Pennsylvania regiments participated and behaved with the utmost gallantry. Among these was the 55th, commanded by Col. White, of this county. Company A of this regiment is composed of Cambria county men, one of whom was killed and seven wounded in the fight. A letter on this page also gives a graphic description of the fight, which see.

W kept up a fire of musketry and artillery for some two hours, when our cartridges becoming exhausted, I sent for a fresh supply. None coming, we fired our last ball, and then laid down under a most galling fire for some twenty minutes. By this time it was growing dark and the firing had begun to slacken, so we fell back out of range in good order, halting twice to form parties coming up, and marched off. Just as we were getting on the road, Orderly Sergeant Alstead, Sergt. Hodge and James Litzinger were wounded.

The loss in Co. A is as follows:— Killed: Sergt. Samuel Hester. Wounded: Sergt. Alstead, right shoulder; Sergt. Hodge, left leg, flesh wound; Sergt. Marlett, right arm, slightly; Hugh M'Atamany, severely wounded in groin, missing; William Gallagher, severely; James Reilly, left side, severely; J. H. Wagner, slightly; James Litzinger, severely, right thigh, flesh wound.

Col. White has considerable praise.— Major Miller is brave to a fault. We had advanced about ten miles, and were within one and a half miles of the railroad, but were forced to retire without accomplishing our object. We marched back to the landing, and lay all night in the field. Went on board the Flora and arrived at Beaufort last night at ten o'clock, and came direct to camp.
