

A ROMANCE OF THE RAIL.—A pretty little bit of romance developed itself in one of the State street cars of Chicago, a few days ago. Among the passengers was a pale, quiet little woman, plainly dressed, and very pretty withal. Presently a one legged soldier labored into the car on his crutches. The seats were crowded, and the soldier had to stand. The young woman got up, pulled the blue sleeve and pointed to the seat she had vacated. For the first, as he returned, she had a full view of his face, and neither of them paid any more attention to the empty seat. They stared at one another a minute, and then, in spite of the awkward motion of the car, embraced and kissed each other with hysterical fervor. At first the passengers were somewhat astonished at so public a demonstration; but all of them soon joined in congratulating the delighted couple upon learning that the two persons thus suddenly brought together were man and wife, long separated by the vicissitudes of war. The soldier had been desperately wounded in Tennessee and taken prisoner. He was supposed to have been killed, and before he was restored to freedom and able to write, his wife or widow, as she supposed herself, removed to Chicago, and so his letters never reached her. The poor fellow, as soon as he could travel, set out for home, with a desponding heart, to learn why his letters had never been answered. He reached Chicago on Friday, on his way thither, when the generous impulse of a kind little woman to a maimed soldier, brought her back a loving husband, and threw him into the open arms of a wife who had long mourned him as among that innumerable host who have lain down their lives for the salvation of their country.

"YOUR TICKET, SIR!"—On one of the northern railroads there is a conductor named S—, a very clever, sociable, gentlemanly fellow, and a great favorite of the company with which he is connected as well as with the traveling public in general—fond of a joke, quick at repartee, and faithful in the discharge of his duties. One day during the past year, as his train, well filled with passengers, was crossing a bridge over a wide stream some seven or eight feet deep, the bridge broke down, precipitating the passenger cars into the stream. As the passengers emerged from the wreck, they were borne away by the force of the current. S— succeeded in catching hold of some bushes that grew near the stream, to which he held for dear life. A passenger, less fortunate, came rushing by. S— extended his hand, saying—"Your ticket, sir; give me your ticket!" The effect of such an exceedingly dry joke in the midst of so much moisture may be imagined.

WASHINGTON'S WILL.—A valuable and interesting document was delivered a few days since to the clerk of the Court of Fairfax county, Va. This document was the original "last will and testament" of General George Washington, which had been for some time preserved in the Virginia State Library, and was saved from the clutches of the army of curiosity hunters who pillaged the building after the taking of Richmond. The instrument is in the clear, legible handwriting of the General, whose precision and accuracy are evinced by his signature being attached to every page and the freedom from mistakes. Every t is crossed, every i dotted, and the marks of the punctuality and thoughtfulness which contributed so greatly to his success in every department of life, are visible in every line.

HE HAD HIM.—The following anecdote is told by the Louisville Journal of Tom Marshall: "A few years since, the great Kentucky orator was delivering an address before a large audience in Buffalo, when some one in the hall every few moments would shout 'louder! louder!' Tom stood this for a while, but at last, turning gravely to the presiding officer, he said: 'Mr. Chairman, at the day when the angel shall, with his golden trumpet, proclaim that time shall be no more, I doubt not, sir, that there will be in that vast crowd, as now, some drunken fool from Buffalo shouting louder! louder!' The house roared, Tom went on with his speech, but there were no more cries of 'louder!'"
