Editorial Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28, 1866. In our last letter, we gave some notice of several distinguished members of the XXXIXth Congress; and shall in our present continue these notices. Among the men of note who occupy a prominent position in the present House, we may name Hon. N. P. Banks. He is a distinguished man, and has won that distinction for himself; by his own unaided exertions, he has placed himself among the foremost statesmen of the country. He commenced life as a factory boy in Massachusetts, and it is among our early recollection of him that he was called "the Bobbin Boy of Waltham." Mr. Banks Boutwell may be rated as a statesman of entered public life when quite a young the highest order, and the nation is not man, and took at once quite an influential lost with such guides. position. In politics he was a Democrat, but to be a Democrat then meant something more than following the wicked behests of slavery; and when the Democratic party left, its time-honored principles, he left it. Mr. Banks has held many indication that the cause of the Union high positions in civil life, in all of which he served with eminent distinction .--He was twice elected Speaker of the House of Representatives of his native State .--He also was chosen President of the Constitutional Convention of Massachusetts in 1853, which was composed of such men as Charles Sumner, Henry Wilson, Rob't. C. Winthrop, Judge Allen, Charles Francis Adams, and many other men of like eminence. He has been several times elected to Coogress, and was, as all know, after a very protracted contest, once elected Speaker of that body. Twice, he was chosen Governor of the old Bay State, which position he filled to the entire satisfaction of his party and to the general acceptance of the people. On the break- promoting its interests and advancing its ing out of the rebellion, he offered his services to his country, and during the darkest period of that great conflict, he was in the field battling for the right. His military career has been censured, but Mr. Lincoln was wont to say of him, "Major General Banks gives me less trouble than almost any other officer in the army." If he was not always successful, he was not alone in that. M'Clellan, Burnside, Butler, Meade, and even fighting Joe Hooker, sometimes failed, and some of their failures were worse than any that overtook General Banks. He has now returned to civil life, and, as we have said, is a member of the present House. He sits near the Speaker's desk, but immediately on his left. He is a mediumsized man, some fifty years of age, and stands crect. He retains the locks of his youth, although plentifully besprinkled with gray. He has a clear, musical voice, rarely speaks unless he has something to say, and then generally carries his point. He is known to be one of the best parliamentarians in Congress, and exerts a commanding influence over his brother members. We predict a useful and prosperous certain points of National policy, and the future for him. Massachusetts has another self-made man of hers on the floor of the present Congress, in the person of Hon. George S. Boutwell, the representative from the 7th District of that State. Mr. Boutwell, like Mr. Banks, received no more aid in his early training than is offered by the Common Schools of that Commonwealth. He commenced business in early life as a clerk, in a country store in the town of Greton, where he afterward for a number of years carried on business for himself, and where he still resides. He was regularly returned to the Legislature from that or not, but because it is part of their town for a number of consecutive years, and served his constituents well, manifestfesting always much candor, and a good son, not that they admire the man or his deal of ability, tact and industry. He, also. was then a Democrat, and abandoned the party when it went over to the cohorts of jealousy amongst us. In short, in the slavery. In 1850 and in 1851, Mr. Boutwell was elected Governor by the Coalition party, as it was called,-that is, by a union between the Democrats and Free- minority, as against Congress, which is soilers in the Legislature, there being no sustained by a large majority of the masses of the people. choice for Governor by the people. The result of this union placed Mr. Boutwell ner in the United States Senate, Mr. Banks

Internal Revenue Bureau, Mr. Boutwell was called to its head by President Lincoln, and rendered very efficient service in organizing that department. On his resignation, he was elected a member of the XXXVIIIth Congress, a position he now holds. There are but few men in the House who can be considered his equal as a Legislator. When he speaks, which is not often, he attracts the undivided attention of the House. Gov. Boutwell is a man whose counsel in the affairs of the nation will be felt for good for a long time to come. We should judge him to be a man of about forty-five years of age, but he may be older. He may be classed among the radicals, and we use this term in no invidious sense, for he is, like all thoughtful and true men, able to give a reason for his faith and conduct. Mr.

Copperhead Tactics.

During the war, whenever the notes of copperhead rejoicing were heard, we well knew what was portended. It was a sure had met with defeat. The rule was an invariable one, that in the dark hours of the rebellion, when the hearts of true patriots were filled with sorrow and gloom, copperhead faces were wreathed with choicest smiles and copperheads spirits were most buoyant and irrepressible.

At the end, when Grant crushed Lee and his cohorts of treason to the earth, though pretending, for decency's sake, to acquiesce in and rejoice over the grand result, yet the copperheads were as much as ever copperheads, and at heart bemoaned the downfall of the slaveholders' confederacy. From the beginning to the end, they were the consistent friends of treason, and devoted their every effort to chances of ultimate success.

Upon the conclusion of the war, the copperheads, beaten in the field, transferred their base of operations to the fo-

Our Harrisburg Letter.

HARRISBURG, March 5, 1866. To the Editor of The Alleghanian :

It is now nine o'clock, Monday morning, March 5, 1866, and in another hour or two the hall of the House, in which I am writing, will be crowded with Democratic | Bill :-delegates, each one feeling that he carries the weight of empires on his shoulders; that upon his ipse dixit rests the welfare of this great Commonwealth. Upon my word, it is pleasant to mingle and commen. Why, ex-Governor Bigler is here; Mr. Ward-old Mr. Ward, sole propri etor of the Patriot & Union, is here ; and a hundred other distinguished gentlemen of the same political faith are here, all Johnson to the skies, and all intent upon exceeding each other in sacrifices to the public good. Of course the country be otherwise? Candidates for Gubernatorial honors are as thick as blackberries. Ouly think of it,-Philadelphia alone offers three distinguished names-Vaux, Knox and Meade, General Meade at that; it? Why, man, he doth bestride the cherished hopes." world like a colossus, and we are bidden to walk under his huge legs and peep about to find ourselves dishonorable graves. Be pleased to consider this, in substance, a quotation from "ould Billy Shakspeare, of Ballyporcen." But, although Stakspeare is the father of the idea, it applies very well to our own times. The Reed nen, of a verity, brag of the superior qualifications of their candidate, and set Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood him up, like Saul among the prophets, a head and shoulders taller than any of rill, Norton,* Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramhis competitors. But, notwithstanding all this, in common parlance, "he is no whar." Clymer, as I told you before, is bring back into the Union, and restore to the strongest man on the first ballot .-What may happen after that you know about as well as I do. Cass and Packer are both strong outside the Convention; how they will fare inside I will not predict farther than this-I would not be surprised if one or the other should be nominated. By the way, let me tell you the Democrats are full of hope, and, I who changed their votes in obedience to might add, with truth at this time, full of the dictates of the President. The folwhisky. They are sanguine of success, lowing was the vote on the bill after the and I feel as if the Republican party veto: should at once put on its soldier clothes and prepare for hard fighting. In regard to the Republican State Convention, which is to assemble on Wednesday, I have little to say. It was supposed a few days ago that Geary's nomination was a foregone conclusion. It is not so now. There is much uncertainty. "Clouds and darkness rest upon it." If my opinion were worth anything, I would give it to you .-Indeed you shall have it any how, and in short it is that Geary will be the man, but the opposition to him is strong. Prepare the minds of the Republicans for any result, and urge upon them the necessity of harmony and organization in support of whomsoever may be nominated. It is true, as you have heard no doubt before now, the Republicans in the Legislature are to a man almost united in opposition to the extraordinary course of the President. The Senate passed a resolution, on Friday last, by a strict party vote, declaring that Senator Cowan misrepresented the party that elected him, and requesting him to resign. It will pass the House by party vote also, but Cowan will not resign. Some think the Democratic Convention will nominate him for Governor; but the prevailing idea is that he will be the candidate of the Democrats and Conservalive Republicans for re-election to the United States Senate next winter. Pardon me for so brief and uninteresting all rates of speed. It makes the interlocked communication. I have reasons which dare not state for saying so little ; but in my next I will make amends for what this lacks in fullness and merit. Yours, &c. nor The following resolution, asking

Rejolcings in the South.

We clip the following extract from the Norfolk, Va., Post, of the 22d February. It is interesting as going to show the light in which the people of the South look upon the veto of the Freedmen's Bureau rum. In the halls of Congress, we find them now attempting, by every means in their power, to nullify the legitimate fruits of our great victories by placing a premium upon treason. They would power, the traitors of the South whose hands are even yet reeking with the blood of our brethren, and whose crimes against God and man remain unatoned for.

These copperheads, who have been uniform in loving treason and hating the Union, endorse to a man the message of President Johnson vetoing the Freedmen's Bureau Bill. Why is this? But a few short days ago, they had nothing for him but words of censure and condemnation. How does it come that now they unite in sending up hallelujahs to his praise? The answer is plain. The President, in the discharge of what he may have conceived his duty, thought proper to take issue with Congress upon copperheads fancy they see in this a probability of a rupture between President and Congress. It is their policy to fan the flames of dissension, so as to surely bring about this rupture, which they hope will end in the destruction of the great party which saved the life of the nation. In this, they see the realization of their fondest dream-the final triumph of treason. To the policy herein foreshadowed, they are bending their utmost energies. They hurrah for the veto of the Freedmen's Bureau Bill, not that they cared particularly whether the bill became law programme to sow the seeds of discord in our ranks; they "endorse" President Johnmeasures to any alarming extent, but as a means of engendering discontent and contest of opinions upon vital questions now agitating the country, they take side with the President, who is sustained by a
