

A Story of Our Late President.

The following we take from the New York Independent. It can be vouched for by many now living:—

On the Monday before his death, when our late beloved President was on his return from Richmond, he stopped at City Point. Calling upon the head surgeon at that place, Mr. Lincoln told him that he wished to visit all the hospitals under his charge, and shake hands with every soldier. The surgeon asked the President if he knew what a task he was undertaking, and told him that there were between five and six thousand soldiers at that place, and it would be quite a task upon his strength to visit all the wards and shake hands with all the soldiers. Mr. Lincoln answered with a smile, that he guessed he would try, and go as far as he could; he would probably never see the boys again, and he wanted them to know that he appreciated what they had done for their country.

Finding it useless to try to dissuade him, the surgeon began to make his rounds with the President, who walked from bed to bed, extending his hand to all, saying a few words of sympathy to some, making kind inquiries of others, and welcomed by all with the heartiest cordiality. As they passed along, they came to a ward in which lay a rebel, who had been wounded and was a prisoner. As the tall figure of the kindly visitor appeared in sight, he was recognized by the rebel soldier, who, raising himself on his elbow in bed, watched Mr. Lincoln as he approached, and extending his hand, he exclaimed, while tears ran down his cheeks: "Mr. Lincoln, I have long wanted to see you, to ask your forgiveness for ever raising my hand against the dear old flag!" Mr. Lincoln was moved to tears. He heartily shook the hand of the repentant rebel and assured him of his good will, and, with a few words of kind advice, passed on. After some hours the tour of the various hospitals was made, and Mr. Lincoln returned with the surgeon to his office. They had scarcely entered, however, when a messenger came, saying that one ward had been omitted, and the "boys" wanted to see Mr. Lincoln. The surgeon, who was thoroughly tired, and knew Mr. Lincoln must be tried to dissuade him from going out; but the good man said he must go out; he would not knowingly omit one of the "boys," they would be so disappointed. He went with the messenger accompanied by the surgeon, and shook hands with the gratified soldiers, and then returned to the office. The surgeon expressed a fear that Mr. Lincoln's arm would be lamed with so much hand-shaking, saying that it certainly must ache. Mr. Lincoln smiled, and saying something about his strong muscles, stepped out at the open door, took up a very large heavy axe, which lay there by a log of wood, and chopped vigorously for a few minutes, sending the chips flying in all directions; and then, pausing, he extended his right arm to its full length, holding the axe out horizontally, without its even quivering as he held it. Strong men who looked on—men accustomed to manual labor—could not hold the same axe in that position for a moment. Returning to the office, he took a glass of lemonade—for he would take no stronger beverage—and while he was within, the chips he had chopped were gathered up and safely cared for by the hospital steward, because they were the "chips that Father Abraham had chopped." In a few hours more, the beloved President was at home in Washington; in a few more days, he had passed away, and a bereaved nation was in mourning.

WHAT DID MARY SAY?—During the trial of one Cogzelle for kidnapping in Hillsboro, N. C., not long since, an incident occurred which created considerable merriment at the expense of the big-wigs and counsel. A young lady was testifying, and was requested to relate all that she knew about a certain transaction. Witness—"I was in the sitting-room when Mary came from the kitchen hurriedly, and Cogzelle after her. He caught hold of her at the sitting-room door, and said, 'Mary, you have been here long enough; come and go home now.'"

Question—"What did Mary say?" Attorney for the State—"Stop there; I object to the question."

Here a discussion of nearly two hours ensued, in which four lawyers participated, after which the Judges held a long, serious and exciting discussion on the subject. Finally, in a formal and pompous manner, it was given as the opinion of the Court that the question should be answered. The court room was crowded almost to suffocation, and the most intense interest was manifested at this stage of the proceedings.

Question repeated—"What did Mary say?"

Answer—"She didn't say a word!"
