An exchange thus discourses of an old Babylonish custom. In this ancient city, it seems, there annually took place an auction of all unmarried ladies, exclusive of widows. In every district, all the marriageable maideus were required to assemble on a certain day, to be auctioned off. The most beautiful were first put up and knocked down to the highest bidder. The second in personal appearance followed, and the bidders gratified themselves with handsome wives according to the depth of their love and the depth of their purses. But, unfortunately, Babylon, like the cities of modern times, was not exempt from some ladies who had but little claim to personal beauty-in plain words, were very ugly. Still these homely damsels could not be permitted by the laws of the State to remain single; they had to marry, nolens volens, as no old maids were allowed in Babylon. Some disposition had therefore to be made of them, and as nobody was likely to bid money on or marry them for their good looks, see what an admirable arrangement the Babylonians had for securing them husbands.

They took the money which arose from the auction of the pretty girls, and endowed the ugly ones each with such a sum as would induce some one to offer himself as a husband. The public crier offered, them first with a small sum of money, which was increased if it was found that no one would take them at that figure, and they were at length knocked down and adjudged to the man who would be satisfied with the least. In this way the . money arising from the sale of the possessors of beauty served as a portion to these who were either of disagreeable looks or had other imperfections. The pretty girls were knocked down to the highest bidders, and the ugly ones to the lowest, just as Government contracts are let to responsible individuals who will perform the required work upon the lowest terms.

The custom to which we have alluded prevailed in Babylon about five hundred years before Christ, and continued down to the latest period of which we have any authentic information. It is said to have been very popular among all classes of people, and to have secured good husbands and faithful and affectionate wives. If such a custom obtained among us, nobody need go unmarried, because at any of the auction houses of the cities he might every day pick up a great bargain in a wife, and if she happened to be ugly she would bring a dowry that would greatly help him in his business, and more than compensate for her homeliness. This would be a fine way to raise money these hard times, and many a man who is now paying ten per cent. a month had no doubt rather take an ugly wife than pay such enormous interest upon money.

History of Alcohol.

Alcohol was invented 940 years ago, by the son of a strange woman, Hagar, in Arabia. Ladies used it, with a powder, to paint themselves, that they might appear more beautiful, and this powder was called alcohol. During the reign of William and Mary, an act was passed encouraging the manufacture of spirits. Soon after, intemperance and profligacy prevailed to such an extent that the retailers of intoxicating drinks put up signs on public places informing the people that they might get drunk for a penny, and have some straw to get sober on.

In the 16th century, distilled spirits spread over the continent of Europe .-About this time it was introduced into the colonies, as the United States were then called. The first notice we have of its use in public life, was among the Hungarian miners in the 15th century. In 1751 it was used by the English soldiers as a cordial. The alcohol in Europe was made of grapes, and sold in Italy and Spain as a medicine. The Genoese afterwards made it from grain, and sold it as mediicine in bottles, under the name of the Water of Life. Until the 16th century it had only been kept by apothecaries as medicine. During the reign of Henry VII, brandy was known in Ireland, and soon its alarming effect induced the government to pass a law prohibiting its manufacture.

-Artemas Ward says no other nation has such an array of celebrated women .-Look at Lucy Stone; look at Miss Dickinson; look at Jeff. Davis; look at Mrs. Partington; look at James Buchanan.
