crat says that the amount of money "in circulation is more in ratio with the number of inhabitants than any other country in the world." So much for a mere matter of fact.

The Democrat does not undertake to divine the cause of its asserted state of affairs, but with astounding astuteness of intellect declares that the cause "is attributable in a great measure to the present appearance of instability in our government," and certain acts of usurpation by "Rump Congress," of all which "the result is, stagnation in business and a fearful looking for impending ruin, &c." Will our cotemporary allow its attention to be called to a few facts not deniable by any one? Neither throughout the war, nor for a year afterward, was there stagnation in business nor lack of employment for laborers, yet taking the Democrat's word for it, disunion was impending then, and usurpations by the Executive and by Congress were of frequent occurrence .--Why, then, should stagnation seize us now? We will try to make the Democrat sensible of the reason.

> Mr. Sherman's bill embraces every essential idea contended for by Congress from the start. It declares that no legal government or adequate protection for life or property exists in the rebel States; it inflicts a penalty upon treason ; it disfranchises leading traitors; it repudiates the rebel debt; it preserves inviolate the Federal debt; it secures equal suffrage. In short, it will do to tie on to. The problem of reconstruction has been a knotty one, but it looks as if the present Congress would prove equal to the task of solving it.
